OVER 90% OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES DEPEND UPON OUR ADVICE.

Over 85 years ago, Municipal Mutual was formed specifically to bring down the cost of insurance for local authorities. Today, our help is more vital than ever. We have the experience. We have the understanding. And we have a network of 17 offices around the country.

We're still a mutual company, with no shareholders to satisfy. And we still deal direct, without paying commissions to intermediaries. We have specialists who will help you reduce your risks. And we give free advice on any insurance matters.

Over 400 of our major local authority customers qualify for a free computer and participation in our Muni-Link system, with instant keyboard access to regional offices.

Name another insurance company which would do that! We can't think of one. But then, providing a total and innovative service to local authorities is our trademark.

Why take unnecessary risks with your cash?

It's quite simple. You shouldn't.

Success in today's financial markets requires the secure protection of capital, as well as a consistently good return.

Our approach to investment is a cautious one, yet in practice it can be highly imaginative. Above all, it lets us provide the type of investment management that our Local Authority clients prefer.

If you would like to know more about our management of surplus funds, please contact Chris Crosland on 071-600 4500.

PREFACE

By the Rt. Hon. Michael Heseltine, MP
Secretary of State for the Environment

Every year presents a new challenge for all of us involved in local government; 1991 has been no exception. Indeed it has been one of the most exciting and positive periods I can recall.

In December 1990 I announced the Government's decision to review local government finance, structure, and functions. That was a decision which local government had long been calling for. One of the first fruits of that review was the decision to replace the Community Charge with the new—property based—council tax. I particularly welcome the constructive approach to the new tax adopted by individual authorities and their representative bodies. Our determination that the new tax should be operational by April 1993 will present a further challenge to the professionalism and determination of local government. I do not underestimate the task. There is a great deal more to do. The smooth implementation of the council tax, and its successful administration will depend on what we can achieve together in 1992. But I am confident, on the record of local government and the positive approach already established, that the target will be met.

The outcome of our review of local government structure was a determination to ensure for the future a pattern of local authorities which reflects local loyalties and local communities. A new Local Government Commission will review the structure of local government in the shire counties and consider the case for change, area by area, taking account of the views of local people, the costs and benefits of change and the economy and effectiveness of service arrangements. The development of the concept of the enabling authority will allow greater emphasis on community loyalties and less on conventional concerns with population size. I expect the Commission's rolling programme of reviews to lead to the establishment of many more unitary authorities with the first of the new authorities coming into being in April 1994.

The pace of change in local government raises the question of whether the traditional methods of working and organisation in local government continue to meet the needs of today. We have consulted widely on a range of alternative internal management arrangements. Local governments' views on these will be particularly important. We are considering them to see whether there is support for legislation which would permit new approaches to be developed in particular authorities, perhaps on an experimental basis.

Last year also saw publication of the Citizen's Charter. This marked a further step in the drive to improve the quality of public services. Local authorities have a key role to play, and I am pleased to see how many authorities have responded with enthusiasm and imagination. More competition has already transformed the way in which some services are provided, bringing better quality at a lower cost. New attitudes to management and delivery are now evident in authorities of very different political persuasion. We are determined to push the benefits of competition into the professional services that authorities provide, and to ensure that private firms have the opportunity to compete. This way we shall ensure that standards are improved, and the citizen gains from greater choice and value for money.

Considerable strides were made over the last year in improving standards of housing management. Fresh support was given to their efforts in the Citizen's Charter which proposed a new Tenants' Charter, including a new Right to Repair, for all secure tenants of local authorities and housing associations. The adoption of Citizens' Charter principles by local authorities in detailed local "charters" will do much to improve further the responsiveness of their management services.

Along with greater competition in the provision of services, this year has seen the start of greater competition in the allocation of resources. The successful conclusion of the first round of City Challenge in July was followed, in August, by a change in our approach to allocating Housing Investment Programme resources. Both these initiatives will put more account of the weight on the quality bids for funds and promote wider involvement of the private sector and community groups in devising and managing renewal programmes which take a broader view of the needs of our run down areas and housing estates. These changes will result in greater quality of output, maximum private sector input and better value for money, especially for tenants.

The Environment White Paper—"This Common Inheritance"—published last year, set out a comprehensive strategy for environmental improvement. This year the Anniversary Report accounted for action on every single commitment. In the last year the Government has introduced some 50 new environmental protection measures and produced over 60 new environmental publications and items of guidance.

I know that many local authorities have also undertaken environmental audits of one sort or another. I hope that every authority will eventually adopt an environmental strategy backed by tough management arrangements to ensure its achievement.

Local authorities have been directly involved in implementing many of these new initiatives including the new litter duties. There is no doubt that the public is tired of the scourge of uncontrolled litter. More of them travel abroad and know that it is not necessary to suffer what had become normal in many parts of this country. We have given local authorities new powers and duties and they must now rise to the challenge. Some are doing so but as I travel the country I am still depressed by the low standards in too many areas, particularly some of our great cities.

Authorities new responsibilities for the environment also include the introduction of recycling plans, new air pollution controls, and improved energy efficiency in housing, to name but a few. Local authorities are in the front line of the battle to improve the local environment. I am confident of their continuing commitment.

1992 will be a key year. I look forward to working closely with all those in local government whose aim is to provide effective and efficient service to the people who live and work in their areas.

EDITOR'S FOREWORD

This is the 95th Edition of the Year Book. It takes its final shape at a time of intense political activity with each of the political parties manoeuvring into position for the next general election which, at the latest, must be held in July 1992, very close to the local government elections. The two elections might even, for the first time for more than a decade, occur at the same time. Political promises abound and during the life of this Year Book, whichever way the election goes, we can be sure of further profound changes to the structure of the basic services which are so fundamental to our well-being and prosperity. Shall we move in the direction of more privatisation with the emphasis on competition, real or contrived, or begin a return to organisations under the direct control of central and local government? However grand and exciting the political promises are made to appear there comes the day of harsh reality when it has to be made to work—first by the introduction of new legislation and then by specific directives any of which can stand large sectors of the public service on its head. Within these two volumes are contained the people who have the unenviable task of making it work. Too often perhaps a struggle of making bricks without straw. If they get it wrong there is chaos and we all suffer.

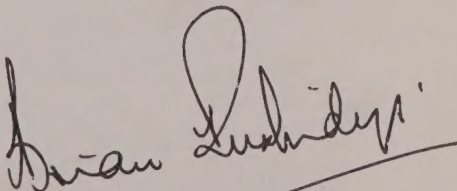

Every year the thousands of entries in the Year Book are checked with the source and it is significant that in the past year well over fifty per cent of the content has changed. The internal structure of individual local authorities is shifting, with committees and departments streamlining and merging leading to a higher turnover and appointment of senior officers. There has been an extraordinary degree of change in titles of Chief Officers which reflect this, plus some for which the reason remains obscure. Inexplicably some users of the Year Book refer to volumes which are two or three years old which change dictates are as out of date as last Sunday's newspaper.

There is increasing need for there to be a bridge between central and local government, the suppliers of goods and services to this vast market and the emerging regulatory bodies being set up to monitor activities, some or all of which were at one time under the direct control of central or local government. In the Health Service and Education the trend towards self governing bodies and trusts is another feature which is developing rapidly. Remembering that this is not only the Municipal Year Book but also the Public Services Directory these volumes set out to provide that bridge. Without effective communication not much happens.

Whilst the primary purpose of the Year Book is to provide accurate data relating to the current year, it is nevertheless a valuable historical record used frequently by those whose need is to refer to when and what changes took place in earlier years and the pattern of public services which has evolved. Since the Year Book is approaching its centenary it has claim to be a unique source of historical reference. Each year prominent people are invited to write an introductory foreword to each of the sections in the Year Book. These cover wide ranging services which affect every aspect of our lives but which all too few of us know much about. If readers can be persuaded to read these reviews for general interest and information they will find it well worth their time.

No sooner has the 1992 Edition of the Year Book reached publication than work must start on the 1993 Edition twelve months ahead. One of the more difficult editorial tasks is to forecast the organisation of central and local government and to attempt to predict the information which readers will be looking for. Easy to do in retrospect but gazing in the crystal ball presents a few more problems. We are always pleased to have constructive comments, criticisms and suggestions to help us with this task, preferably earlier in the year before the volumes are set too firmly in print. Once more I must thank the thousands of busy people who respond so readily to our up-date enquiries, with only one plea that information is returned by the target date. Desperate phone calls to fill in gaps are an exhausting business both for the editorial staff and for those who are being chased for the information. New technology is helping us to ensure that the Year Book is accurate and up-to-date and we are confident that the 1992 Year Book has set new standards and we are grateful to all those who have worked hard to make it so.

NOTES ON ELECTION YEARS

England and Wales: In the case of County Councils, elections are held for the whole council on the first Thursday in May every fourth year. Similarly elections for the City of London and all the thirty-two London Boroughs are held every fourth year. In Metropolitan Districts councillors are again elected for four years but one-third retire each year except in the year in which county council elections are held. Non-Metropolitan District Councils have a choice of procedure of a whole council election every four years or elections by thirds as for Metropolitan Districts, all elections always being on the first Thursday in May. In England 182 non-Metropolitan District Councils have chosen whole council elections, and 114 elections by thirds. In Wales 32 district Councils have whole Council elections and only five have elections by thirds. Local councils in England and Wales hold elections every fourth year.

Scotland: The term of office for councillors for regional, islands and district councils is four years, with an election of the whole council on the first Thursday in May every fourth year.

Northern Ireland: District Councillors are elected for a term of four years on a proportional representation basis, an election of the whole council taking place on the third Wednesday in May every fourth year.

CORRELATION INDEX AND GUIDE TO FORMER LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Reorganization of local government and local authorities has spread over a period of ten years or more, commencing in Greater London in 1965. This index seeks to guide the reader, still familiar with town names, to the change of names of local authorities into which former authorities in England, Wales and Scotland (see note (ii) below) have been absorbed. Old names of local authorities can be found in column 1 and the corresponding entry in column 2 directs the reader to the present title listed in the preceding index of local authorities.

Column 1 contains the names of all former local authorities, with the type of authority identified by the following letters:-

CC	County Council	U	Urban District Council
CB	County Borough	R	Rural District Council
MB	Metropolitan Borough (former London area)	SB	Scottish City or Burgh
B	Borough Council	SC	Scottish County Council

Column 2 contains present name of the district councils after reorganization, and particular types of new authorities (other than district councils in England) are noted by the letters:

LB	London Borough	W	Welsh District
M	Metropolitan District	S	Scottish District

Column 3 contains names of the reorganized county area or regional area. Particular types are noted by the letters

M	Metropolitan Area (England)	SR	Scottish Region
SI	Scottish Islands Council

NOTES

- (i) Some former authorities were absorbed into two or more new authorities in the several reorganizations, and are shown thus:
Axbridge (Rural)—Sedgemoor/Mendip/Woodspring—Somerset/Avon.
- (ii) This index is completed in relation to changes in England and Wales, but the changes in the former Scottish District Councils were too involved to compress into index form. Therefore, the correlation for Scotland, in this index, is restricted to former counties, cities and burghs.
- (iii) The Greater London Council and the Metropolitan Counties were abolished by statute in 1985.

CHANGE IN THE 1990's

A Review by Roger Paine, Chief Executive City of Cardiff

The 1990's promise to be a decade of unparalleled change in twentieth century life. Change will affect directly and indirectly the environment within which local government operates. This will add to the "institutional" changes already planned for local government and pose major questions and issues for all managers, especially "top" managers.

Almost from its outset the 1990's have turned upside down many of our traditional assumptions. The events of Eastern Europe, South Africa and the new East-West relations have released an international peace dividend which politicians in the 1970's and 1980's would have considered only in their wildest dreams. At a different level, the voice sensitive computer, the cure for cancer and a food pill are amongst a long catalogue of possibilities in the 1990's affecting the way we live and work.

Many of these changes can be quantified, particularly those relating to demography. In the United Kingdom we know that the number of pensioners will rise from 10½ million to 14 million, that the number of women in work will dramatically increase and for recruitment purposes a demographic time bomb has been lit by the falling number of school leavers. Equally, I believe that there are many other changes that cannot be identified never mind quantified. These are best described as the "unthinkable" . . . but they will happen. Out of these changes, two points emerge. First, that in the 1990's the pace of change will accelerate and second that in looking at change, uncertainty will be more important than certainty. For local government in the United Kingdom and its managers, these two points will be particularly important.

Local government operates within this broader environment that I have outlined. Local government has to react to these changes and to lead and influence the response. Other contributors, notably Roger Jeffries in 1990 and Jeffrey Greenwell in 1991 have catalogued the changes to local government in the 1980's. Currently local government is facing fundamental changes to its institutional framework of function, structure and finance. These particular changes are taking place without a fully informed debate about the purpose or mission of local government, and its values, and without a vision for local/central relationships for the 1990's.

Local government is more than a collection of services; it is about community government. It is also about the process which is at the heart of the United Kingdom's democratic system. The classical arguments in favour of local government are—

- * It contributes to the political education of its citizens
- * It acts as a counterweight to the centralist tendencies of the unitary state
- * It is likely to be more responsive to the needs of local communities

The changes to the local government institutional framework will absorb the minds and time of politicians (locally and nationally), top managers, and employees. The danger is that they will divert attention from the real fundamental changes of the 1990's. Unemployment, poverty, the physical and social infrastructure problems will still exist whilst we consider the relative merits of one local authority's boundary with another. Our customers will be rightly demanding quality services, improved response rates and value for money.

Europe is an additional dimension and here there are lessons to be drawn from European local government and opportunities to be grasped post 1992. The free commune experiment in Scandinavia for example shows how local government can be trusted to exercise wide ranging functions. Elsewhere authorities with a relatively small population can provide a comprehensive range of services.

The changes I have outlined at an international and national level and within the world of local government impact directly on the lives of our managers. If the key task of the manager is to "manage change", how will our managers react in the 1990's?

There are several keys to managing change; a clear vision and a planning process being two basic requirements. But, in making change happen, the most important is an understanding of culture. I am using culture in this sense as a description of the multitude of often unwritten rules and conventions that operate in any organisation. Some define culture as a "force field", others as the "organisational glue". I prefer a simpler definition of "this is the way we do things around here". Every organisation has a culture and within it sub-cultures for individual departments or sections. In general "loose knit" organisations (particularly where there is a geographical separation) tend to have a greater range of sub-cultures.

Cultures reflect the values of an organisation and what people actually believe in. In some organisations the actual values are very different from the desired values set out in a mission statement. Furthermore, there is a time lag between the definition of a mission and an organisation's ability to deliver. The manager needs to understand the concept of culture and to recognise that any employees do not want change as it makes them feel uncomfortable or even threatened. "We must learn to love change" argues Tom Peters, the American management guru, but that's not always an easy concept to put across. In the 1990's the pace and nature of change will mean that influencing cultural change will be the basic task of all managers.

How then can the manager approach his or her task? We must recognise that culture is a concept and there is no easy answer or magic formula. Culture can be influenced by a variety of means such as communication techniques and processes (e.g. team briefing), individual motivation (development motivational opportunities), but above all it is about how people (i.e. employees) are valued. If employees are seen as a liability on a balance sheet and unimportant in others than a cost sense, then it is unlikely that cultural change will take place. If, however, employees are seen as an organisation's biggest asset and they are treated positively and with dignity, then cultural change is possible. In these circumstances, managers by their actions can do a great deal to influence cultural change. Simple symbols such as how employees are greeted and addressed, whether they are praised or punished and the use of the most under-used motivational phrase "thank you", are all ways of influencing a culture.

For many managers new skills will have to be acquired and existing ones developed. Management development ought to be a high priority in every organisation; unfortunately in many it is seen as a luxury. Opportunities must also be made to broaden experiences; secondments, exchanges and sabbaticals are just a few examples of what can be done. Managers too need "a home" and the idea of a managers network or association in local government is currently under discussion. It is a worrying fact that many managers may be well qualified professionals in a particular discipline but have had no opportunity either for personal development or for mixing with managers elsewhere, both within and outside local government. By giving managers in local government this network opportunity and through the sharing of experience and good practice. I believe that their skill levels will be improved.

I have used the term managers in a general sense, but what of the top managers in local government in the 1990's? There is no doubt that the demands placed upon them will be greater than ever before and that their skills in strategic planning and management will need to be of the highest order. But will this be enough given the volatile perhaps ambiguous surroundings they have to operate in. The top managers will need to demonstrate leadership qualities of the highest order and in addition to the management of culture skills outlined above, they will need to be innovators rather than administrators, to see their skills as developing people and inspiring trust and to continue to look at both the short term and the long term. Above all, they will need a sense of vision and an ability to share and communicate that vision.

The 1990's will be an exciting decade. I believe it will be a decade of unprecedented change for us as individuals and for the local government business. Managers hold the key; top managers hold the combination lock. Both need people skills and vision of the highest order. Local government's ability to deliver what its customers and citizens expect lies in their hands.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED SECRETARIES AND ADMINISTRATORS

President: D. H. Kirkham, FCIS.

Chief Executive/Secretary: M. J. Ainsworth, DipEd, FCIS, FInstAM, MBIM, 16 Park Crescent, London W1N 4AH (071-580 4741).

Formed in 1891, and granted a Royal Charter in 1902, the Institute is one of the leading professional bodies in the UK and throughout the world. The Institute has 21,000 members in the UK and Ireland and 24% of these are employed in local government. The worldwide membership stands at over 44,000 with an additional 21,000 registered students.

The aim of the Institute is the promotion and advancement of efficient administration and management in commerce, industry and the public sector. Like other professional bodies the Institute maintains educational standards through qualifications which are awarded to those who are successful in their examinations.

A recent review of the qualifying process for the professional qualification—aimed at ensuring the education scheme was meeting the needs of today's fast-changing business environment, and the career aspirations of students—resulted in radical changes to the structure, entry policy and Local Government syllabuses.

Entry Policy

Entrants for the examinations must be 17 years of age or over. No previous academic requirements are needed for entry to the examinations at the earliest stage—the Foundation Programme. Those entering without academic qualifications—known as Open Entrants—will, however, have to complete the Foundation Programme before continuing to the next Programme.

The Institute operates a policy of Direct Entry to the higher levels of the examinations—the Pre-professional and Professional Programmes, details of which are available from the Institute. Graduates of any discipline enter at the Professional Programme.

Examination Structure

The examinations consist of 17 modules in 3 Programmes:

Foundation Programme

Pre-professional Programme

Professional Programme – Parts A and B

The Foundation Programme (5 modules) and the Pre-professional Programme (4 modules) provide a broad based business education covering law, accounting, quantitative studies, economics, organisational behaviour, information systems and personnel. These programmes introduce students to the theories which will underpin studies of a more practical and applied nature in the Job Related Streams of the Professional Programme.

The Professional Programme Part A contains 4 compulsory common modules which are Meetings, Company Law, Management of Systems and Management: Principles and Policy, key disciplines essential for Chartered Secretaries in all jobs.

The Professional Programme Part B offers a choice of Job Related Streams—currently:

Financial Administration and Management

Pension Fund Administration and Management

Company Secretarial Administration and Management

Local Government Administration and Management

Students select one of the Job Related Streams, according to their job requirements or career aspirations.

Alternatively, a student who does not wish to follow a specified stream can have a Personalised Job Programme made up of any 4 modules from across the range of Job Related Streams. Local Government students have a further option—to substitute one non-compulsory module from their specialised Job Related Stream for one module from another Stream.

At the Professional level, the examinations focus on the student's ability to demonstrate competence, and to apply theoretical knowledge to practical situations.

Local Government Administration and Management Stream

This Job Related Stream consists of four modules:

- Local Government Administration 1 (compulsory)
- Local Government Administration 2 (compulsory)
- Local Government Financial Management
- Local Government Law

Local Government Administration 2 uses a pre-seen case study as the basis of the examination.

Entry to Professional Membership

Successful completion of the examinations is the first requirement of professional membership. The other two requirements are relevant work experience and good character.

There are two classes of membership of the Institute, Associate and Fellow. All members are entitled to describe themselves as Chartered Secretaries and to use the abbreviations ACIS or FCIS as appropriate.

Associates (ACIS) must be at least 21 years of age, and be holding an appropriate appointment. They must also have completed a period of practical experience or training, i.e. six years, although this may be reduced in certain circumstances, for example, in respect of approved full-time study.

Fellows (FCIS) must be at least 25 years of age, and have normally had eight years' experience in the office of one or more organisations. For three of the last ten years they must have held a senior appointment.

Graduates (Grad ICSA) are successful finalists in the examinations who have not yet applied for Associateship or Fellowship, or who are accumulating the required experience for membership.

Local Government Services

The Institute aims to keep its members up-to-date professionally by post-qualifying education (courses, conferences and seminars), through its monthly journal 'Administrator' which has a local government edition, and by having an excellent library and information service at Park Crescent. It also leads the profession through other activities such as submissions to government departments on consultative documents, White Papers etc., government proposals; conferences, seminars and publications; and the promotion of efficient administration and management in local government in general, and of the Institute's qualification in local government in particular. The Institute's activities in this field are spearheaded by its Local Government Administrators' Panel, composed of members who are senior serving officers in local authorities in England and Wales. A parallel Panel for Scotland was established in 1982.

Other Services

The Institute's branches, which cover all the UK, are a main source of Institute activity and each branch organises a full programme of events and functions throughout the year. The Institute has a partnership with MSL Recruitment Consultants who run a placement service for Chartered Secretaries.

Further information on all services is available from ICSA at the address above.

THE ASSOCIATION OF PUBLIC SERVICE ADMINISTRATIVE STAFF

President: Steven Lake, MAPSAS

Secretary: Lesley Brown, 16 Park Crescent, London W1N 4AH (071-580 4741).

The Association of Public Service Administrative Staff (APSAS) is for public service administrative staff who are experienced and qualified to or above the level of the Business & Technician Education Council (BTEC) Higher National Award. Members are employed not only in local government, but also in the National Health Service, the Civil Service, the water industry and other public sector bodies.

APSAS was established in 1982 as a consequence of the implementation of the integration scheme between the Institute of Chartered Secretaries and Administrators (ICSA) and the Institute of Local Government Administrators (ILGA). It is an independent body sponsored by ICSA and a separate entry for ICSA appears elsewhere in this section.

There are many administrators throughout the public sector who can benefit from joining a professional body of like-minded officers who are interested in the practice of administration in the public service. APSAS aims to promote and advance efficient administration, develop the efficiency and usefulness of the service provided by its members, and encourage the training, education and experience of administrative staff.

Members of APSAS are entitled to the designatory letters MAPSAS. They receive the local government edition of "Administrator" the ICSA's monthly journal and an annual Year Book, and are invited to ICSA branch meetings when public service subjects are discussed; can attend conferences, seminars etc organised by APSAS on a national basis; use ICSA's reference library; and of course participate in the running of the Association through its Council and its branches.

Full Members must have an administrative qualification of at least the standard of the Higher National Award of the Business & Technician Education Council (BTEC) such as:

- (i) A degree in Business Administration or Public Administration.
- (ii) A relevant Higher National Certificate or Diploma of BTEC.
- (iii) Certificate or Diploma in Municipal Administration
- (iv) Diploma in Management Studies.
- (v) Diploma in Public Administration.
- (vi) Parts I and II of the ICSA exams.

They must also be employed in the public sector and have been so employed for the two years previous to their application.

During 1991, senior administrators with five years experience in the public sector and administrators with any qualification of at least the standard of the BTEC Higher National Award who have been employed in the public sector for one year, are eligible to join APSAS under a Special Admission Scheme.

Student membership is open for those persons who are employed in the public sector, or in full time courses, and who are studying for qualifications recognised for Full membership.

Members of ICSA are not eligible for membership of APSAS.

THE INSTITUTE OF LEGAL EXECUTIVES

Secretary: L. A. Evans, Kempston Manor, Kempston, Bedford, MK42 7AB (0234 841000;
Fax: 0243 840373)

The Institute of Legal Executives was established in 1963 to provide a scheme of training and examination for staff employed in solicitors' offices. The examinations it sets are designed to relate to and extend the practical experience which students get in the solicitors' offices or legal departments where they work.

There are four categories of Institute member: Students, Associates, Members and Fellows. Under the scheme of education and training introduced in 1981, a person will enrol initially as a Student and become a Member on completing the Membership Examination. Fellowship is open to those who have passed the examinations and gained substantial experience in the legal profession. The Associate grade was awarded under the former scheme of training to those who completed the introductory stage of examinations; it is not awarded under the current scheme.

The Institute's role has now widened slightly to include a qualification in legal accountancy and the award of single-subject Diplomas at Degree level.

Non-Members can take single subjects of Part II for the award of Institute Diplomas. Twenty-five specialist subjects are available. They are particularly useful for people working outside the legal profession, but whose work involves some specialist area of law, such as company law, contracts, crime, tax law or social welfare or employment law.

Fellows and qualified Members of the Institute who wish to broaden the range of their expertise can also make use of the Diploma regulations by taking extra Part II subjects for the award of Diplomas.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT MANAGEMENT BOARD

Local government in the 1990s

Distinct professional roles exist within authorities, but rigid barriers between departments must be eroded if local government is to survive. In the current political climate, everyone is involved in providing good services for the public.

To do this it is vital that ideas and information are exchanged between departments and authorities. Officers and staff in local authorities now need magazines that provide for both the central services and the technical departments.

By reading Municipal Journal each week you will keep yourself up-to-date with developments throughout British local government.

THE LOCAL AUTHORITIES RESEARCH AND INTELLIGENCE ASSOCIATION (LARIA)

The Local Authorities Research and Intelligence Association (LARIA) was established in 1975 to promote the further development and understanding of research practices in local government.

Aims

The aims of the Association are:

- (a) To encourage communication between those involved in research and intelligence in local government and, in particular, to aid the sharing of technical knowledge and research methods.
- (b) To promote a wider understanding in local government of the research and intelligence function and to foster its further development.
- (c) To improve research and intelligence practice in local government.
- (d) To provide a research and intelligence viewpoint both inside and outside local government.

Background

The concept of a co-ordinated research and intelligence service in local government largely evolved during the period leading up to the 1974 re-organisation. There followed the establishment of central units in many of the larger authorities on local government reorganisation or to specific sections in various departments in some local authorities being given corporate responsibilities. These units or sections were made responsible for a wide range of activities; from providing information and forecasting, research consultancy services and corporate policy; to, more recently, social surveys, economic intelligence and other policy related research.

The Association

LARIA is an organisation which is of interest to all people working on research and intelligence activities for local authorities or allied fields, and depends upon the active participation of such people to promote, maintain and develop professional practices. The activities of the Association are directed by a Steering Group comprised of people active in local authority research and intelligence together with several co-opted members from related fields.

The Association's programme includes:

- a two-day Conference, held annually in March/April;
- an annual programme of seminar and workshops on issues of current concern;
- A two-day Workshop held annually in October/November;
- Research and Intelligence News, published three times a year.

LARIA have published occasional papers on:

1. Service Delivery to Disadvantaged Groups,
2. Information Systems Development and the Management of Urban Change,
3. Organising for Competitive Tendering.
4. Expert Systems in British Land Use Planning.

Also, two previously published monographs on 'Survey Methodology' and 'Demographic Forecasting' have been reissued.

Officers 1991/92

Chairman: L. Worrall, Principal Policy Planner, Wrekin Council.

Hon. Secretary: S. Little, Officer in Charge, West Midlands Joint Planning & Transport Data Team.

Hon. Treasurer: P. Noble, Head of R.&I. Services, LB Hamersmith & Fulham.

THE ROYAL INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

Director-General: David Falcon, 3 Birdcage Walk, London, SW1H 9JH (071-222 2248).

The RIPA, founded in 1922, is the leading independent British institution concerned with policy making and management in the public sector. Its aims are to help improve the effectiveness of public administration and to increase public understanding of its scope and processes. It is concerned both with the needs of public authorities and with the needs of the public they serve.

The RIPA has members and subscribers, individual and corporate, throughout Britain and the world. Individual members are found in all parts of the public service, academic and research institutions, Parliament, the media, business and elsewhere. Corporate members and subscribers include the UK government, many UK local authorities, health authorities, public corporations, non-departmental public bodies, educational, research and professional institutions, voluntary organisations, private sector bodies and overseas governments.

Over the years the RIPA has engaged in a wide range of activities of value to local government. It organises conferences, seminars and workshops on major issues of concern to local authorities and to other public bodies. It runs a range of skills related training courses, as well as courses designed to improve the development and performance of managers. It aims to bring together practitioners from local government and other parts of the public service with academic and private sector experts and, where relevant, with people from overseas, to compare experience and discuss issues of common interest. The Institute has undertaken many research projects on matters of vital interest to local authorities, which have resulted in major books, and shorter studies on significant administrative topics. Public Administration, its quarterly journal, publishes many articles on local government subjects; RIPA Report, its Newsletter, contains news and comment on recent developments in public administration. Its other journal, Public Administration and Development, includes articles on local government and administration in developing countries.

RIPA's International Division provides training and consultancy for overseas countries. This helps the Institute to develop a wider view of local government through experience of other countries.

The RIPA has a well-equipped Library with a computerised public administration database and an extensive bibliographical and information service available to member authorities. This makes possible instant comprehensive searches of the holdings of RIPA's library and is an invaluable tool for anyone working in or studying in the public sector. Regional Groups, in the main administrative centres of the UK, arrange local programmes of lectures, conferences, seminars, workshops and visits. The RIPA works closely with research institutes, professional organisations, educational establishments and other bodies.

HEAD OF PAID SERVICE

The Local Government and Housing Act 1989 Part I s. 4 requires each local authority to designate an officer as Head of Paid Service and to provide that officer with sufficient resources to carry out the duties specified. The Head of Paid Service must report as appropriate on the co-ordination of the authority's affairs, levels, grades and organisation of staff, and their appointment and management. The report must go to every member of the authority and must be considered by the full authority within three months.

In all but a few instances authorities have confirmed that they have appointed the officer in the list contained in these Volumes under the heading "Chief Executives (or other Principal Chief Officers)".

MONITORING OFFICER

The Local Government and Housing Act 1989 Part I s. 5 requires each local authority to designate an officer as Monitoring Officer and to provide that officer with sufficient resources to carry out the duties specified. The Monitoring Officer may be Head of the Paid Service but not the Chief Finance Officer. He/She must report if any proposal, decision or omission by the authority, its committees or sub-committees or officers has caused or is likely to cause: a contravention of the law or any code of practice; a maladministration or injustice such as the Ombudsman could investigate. These rules also cover joint committees on which the authority is represented. In preparing his/her report the monitoring officer must consult with the head of the paid service and the chief finance officer. Copies of the report must go to every member of the authority. The report must be considered by the full authority within 21 days and no step must be taken in the meantime to give effect to the proposal or decision under challenge, which is suspended. In case of absence or illness the monitoring officer's duties may be carried out by a nominated deputy.

Authorities have appointed officers listed below, identified by the following abbreviations:

CE = Chief Executive (or other Principal Chief Officer); SD = Secretary and/or Director of Administration; LO = Legal Officer; NA = no appointment made or no answer received.

LOCAL AUTHORITY LAND AND PROPERTY

A Review by R. S. Gregory, ARICS, IRRV
President, Local Authority Valuers Association

The Bains Report on Local Government Management and Structure succinctly summarised its main assets as Finance, Personnel and Property.

It falls to the lot of Local Authority Estates Surveyors and Heads of Property Departments, many of whom are members of the Local Authority Valuers Association, to administer this substantial portfolio which, according to the Audit Commission, has a market value of "probably more than £100 billion".

It is only in recent years that the spotlight has been turned on to this immensely valuable resource and concern expressed about the need for its dynamic management. Local Authority Estates Surveyors in general, and the Association in particular, welcome this concern because it is a message we have been endeavouring to preach for many years.

It is a truism, but nevertheless worth repeating, that the first step to good property management is to be fully aware of what you own. Even the smallest Local Authority is likely to have many hundreds of hectares of land within its ownership, and several thousand square metres of buildings, the majority of which are likely to be within its own occupation, with others being let to tenants. It is essential that each Authority has a comprehensive and regularly maintained Asset Register, preferably computerised and including a Graphical Information System (GIS). The Register should at the very least include data on floor space, maintenance and running costs, and the type of construction, planning and legal restrictions and a summary of any tenancies, and should ideally include a condition survey as well to assist with planned maintenance and to enable an accurate value to be placed upon the portfolio.

The Chartered Institute of Public Finance & Accounting has recently announced that it has decided to recognise formally the development and maintenance of comprehensive asset registers as best professional practice, and is urging all local authorities to produce such registers by April, 1993.

The past year has seen a number of Government initiatives related to landed property. Some of the more radical proposals in the DOE Consultation Paper on Encouraging the Use of Public Sector Land such as Government directions to dispose of land to named persons, and experimental local franchises of packages of sites have been dropped, following strong lobbying from professional bodies such as LAVA and the RICS and also the Local Authority Associations. However, proposals to widen the scope of Land Registers and make their compilation mandatory may well proceed and this underlines yet again the need for all public sector land owners, including Local Authorities, to have comprehensive and up to date records of land ownership.

Another significant initiative, arising from the Environmental Protection Act, 1990, is the proposal that Local Authorities should produce Registers of land which may be contaminated. The intention is that such Registers should be completed by April, 1993—another task which depends on property related data.

It may be said, therefore, that one of the main challenges facing the profession at the present time is that of information—the availability of comprehensive records of local authority land and buildings.

Another significant challenge is that of Quality. Both main political parties are advocating a form of Quality Commission, and there is increasing emphasis within the profession on the importance of quality assurance, a concept which has long been part of the manufacturing sector but is now assuming greater significance within professional services. Organisations within both the public and private sectors are increasingly seeking formal accreditation under BS 5750.

And, of course, the challenge of competition remains. Dynamic property management must include attention to cost effectiveness in providing that professional service. Whether or not valuation and estate management will be included in any further proposals for extending compulsory competitive tendering, most Local Authority Estates Surveyors are already providing their services on a notional practice account basis so that they are ready to face the challenge of competition from the private sector.

In all these areas the Local Authority Valuers Association exists to provide mutual help and assistance in furthering the professional work of Local Authority property management. The main objectives of the Association are:

1. To promote and co-ordinate the application of the principles and practice of valuation and estate management in the interest of local authorities.
2. To hold meetings for the purpose of considering and discussing problems of procedure and practice and for the exchange of knowledge and opinions on matters of professional interest.
3. To advise and make representations to Government departments, local authority associations, professional institutions and other bodies as, from time to time, may be deemed advisable.
4. To encourage an exchange of views with other associations and bodies dealing with matters of valuation and estate management.

LAVA is pleased to be involved in consultations with colleagues in central government and the Association has played an important part in a number of Department of Environment technical working parties. Close contacts are also maintained with the Inland Revenue Valuation Office through the medium of the Valuation Liaison Group and this allows discussions and mutual exchanges of views on valuation issues which could well have a significant impact on local authorities.

Although there is perhaps a tendency to imagine that local authority property management is all about offices, schools, old people's homes etc. many authorities also have significant interests in agricultural issues. The Association has concerned itself through its County Branch with the continuing problems associated with agricultural and, in particular, County Farms.

Most English and Welsh Counties own and manage an Agricultural Estate of County Farms and the administration of these Estates involves striking the right balance between effective management of a large and valuable property resource, the provision of an essential service as far as the agricultural community is concerned and the need to take a positive role in rural diversification and environmental protection. County Farms, which were traditionally referred to as Smallholdings, range from small areas of bare land to commercially viable units fully equipped with a farmhouse and appropriate buildings for the acreage and type of farm and enterprises practised. On falling vacant, holdings are available to let to young people wishing to make a start in farming on their own account.

In most areas County Farms provide the only opportunity for aspiring young farmers with limited capital to set up their own farm businesses, but even the capital necessary to stock, equip and run a County Farm is a daunting prospect to most young people employed in the industry. At the request of the ACG, LAVA convened a Working Party with the following terms of reference:

"To consider the financial needs of those wishing to make a start in farming, and those recently having started a farming career, and to make recommendations as to ways in which those needs can be met in order to encourage and support the farming industry in general and the role of County Council farming estates in particular."

The recommendation set out in the resultant report "County Farms—Financing the Early Years of a Farming Career" have been adopted by the ACC and are commended to County Farms Authorities and Managers.

In summary, local authority land and property, whether held for operational or non-operational purposes, is a dynamic resource which requires professional management of the highest order.

The Local Authority Valuers Association welcomes the increasing interest in land as a resource, and the continuing debate about how its use can best contribute to the economic and social well being of the Country.

AGRICULTURAL MARKETING ACT 1958: CONSUMERS' COMMITTEES AND COMMITTEES OF INVESTIGATION

Under the provisions of Section 19 of the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958, the appropriate Minister or Ministers are required to appoint Consumers' Committees and Committees of Investigation for England and Wales, for Scotland and for Great Britain.

The Committees have been in operation since 1933 but did not function from 1939 to 1953 when the majority of schemes were suspended or modified under Defence Regulations.

Marketing Schemes are in operation for, Wool (United Kingdom), Potatoes (Great Britain), and Milk (one scheme for England and Wales and three for Scotland).

The duty of a Consumers' Committee is to consider and report to the Minister on:

- (1) the effect of any scheme approved by the Minister, which is for the time being in force, on consumers of the regulated product; and
- (2) any complaints made to the Committee as to the effect of any such scheme on consumers of the regulated product.

COUNTY SMALLHOLDINGS, ENGLAND

The following statistical information on Smallholdings/County Farms has been received from the County Councils. The management of this service is now undertaken in accordance with the provisions of the Agricultural Act, 1970, which particularly sought to re-organise the holdings in each county area into larger units to provide more intensive farming. The information collected indicates that the number of small holdings has been falling, and the trend is certainly towards fewer but larger holdings in accordance with the aim of the 1970 Act.

Agricultural Analysts are listed in Section 8.

THE MANAGEMENT OF MAINTENANCE

A Review by Alfred G. Grevatt FBIM, The Institute of Maintenance and Building Management

It has been stated variously by the Audit Commission and others that the expenditure on building maintenance of local authorities property is in excess of £1 billion annually. It is also often stated that there is a maintenance backlog of many billions of pounds.

The architectural and initial construction costs are a 'one-off' expenditure and represent a small percentage of the total costs of a building; the maintenance costs account for the major part of the whole-life costs. It seems logical therefore that building maintenance considerations ought to be taken into account at the design stage and should be the major factor in the design process.

It is, of course, important that aesthetic considerations are placed well up the list of priorities and it is indeed encouraging that in recent years the appearance of buildings has greatly improved. Nevertheless in the interest of long term cost effectiveness, maintenance considerations must be afforded their appropriate priority. The properties owned by local authorities whether they be housing, schools, civic buildings and the like represent tremendous capital assets and it is most important to the nation that our future heritage is adequately protected. This can only be achieved by ensuring value for money.

Whilst there has been an increasing awareness over the past decade of importance of adequate building maintenance, insufficient funding is made available to ensure that our national investment is protected. In recent years, housing 'New Build' within the public sector has been reduced to a mere trickle and this implies that the existing stock will need to last longer. If this is to be achieved at minimum cost then the standards of maintenance will need to be raised and the efficiency and effectiveness with which the work is carried out will have to be improved.

Government legislation over the last decade from the Planning and Land Act of 1980 to the Local Government (Direct Labour Organisation) (Competition) Regulations 1989 has been aimed at improving the overall efficiency especially of Direct Labour and Direct Service Organisations. It is questionable, however, whether such legislation has enhanced the overall standard of the preservation of our national property assets. Increases in financial resources to ensure that these objectives are met have not been forthcoming despite continued pressure. However without some increase in the financial resources allocated to the repair and maintenance, particularly of dwelling houses, further serious deterioration of the stock will occur and this will necessitate drastic remedies in the not too distant future.

There are indications that Government Ministers are aware of these problems but the Treasury is seen as the stumbling block. Some new thinking on this subject which moves away from an annual budget to a longer term financial commitment is necessary to stabilise the position. This would lead to improved work planning resulting in better value for money by reducing the level of responsive maintenance and by increasing planned maintenance.

There have been many studies on building maintenance over the years by a wide variety of bodies ranging from users' associations, the academics and individuals. Arguments have ranged on the merits or otherwise of using directly employed labour. What is needed are practical solutions directed towards achieving a high degree of success in the operation of an effective, efficient building maintenance organisation.

There are, of course, differences of opinion and approach in the methods employed in determining the responsibilities for building maintenance. The objective must always be to avoid additional costs, through the duplication of work or extension of response times to the overall detriment of the service given to the client. It must be recognised that in any organisation of whatever size a competent director, who will be a member of the corporate management team, should be appointed to lead the department whose purpose and objectives must be to advise, administer, control, direct and execute this highly specialised work for and on behalf of the organisation. Such an organisation must be treated as an important part of the organisation's services and be completely self contained and independent.

There should be an overall building maintenance policy setting down the standards and priorities to be achieved. This will form a logical system for determining the financial resources to be allocated for the purpose of the life cycle maintenance of the buildings. The first task must be to define the standards of maintenance that are appropriate to the various buildings and environments under consideration, dwellings, public buildings, educational establishments, hospitals, industrial and commercial properties.

The prime objective of the maintenance manager is to ensure that client departments, tenants or occupiers, are provided with uninterrupted use of acceptable buildings, services and environmental surroundings at the lowest cost to the owner. To achieve this objective, the standards set should be realistic and should be able to be met by the maintenance unit operating at optimum levels. The client department, in conjunction with the maintenance manager, sets priorities and standards that are appropriate to the building stock. It is essential that a comprehensive building maintenance management approach is adopted because repair and maintenance work is so often restricted by financial, and other, limitations.

So much for planning; what is the Institute of Maintenance and Building Management doing to help?

At the time of writing, the Building and Building Maintenance Industry is facing its worst recession for very many years. This recession comes at a time when those involved, particularly in the Public Sector, are responding to the changes brought about by Government legislation and demands for higher standards of service delivery. Furthermore the wavering political situation does nothing to hasten the ending of the recession.

Companies and individuals alike tend to be over-cautious at times of recession but I would remind readers that this Yearbook is dated 1992—a year which heralds the Single European Market and the resultant challenges from mainland Europe. The realisation of this threat is only slowly materialising.

Trainers will tell you that training is normally the first casualty of recession. Now is the time to reverse the trend by placing emphasis on the development of abilities to meet the challenge of the changing market place.

The Institute of Maintenance and Building Management has been steadily preparing itself for the '90s and beyond. It has been working closely with the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and Training Department in the development of National Vocational Standards in Building Maintenance and Estates Services. The Institute is not doing so for its own benefit; it has been appointed the Lead Industry Body for Building Maintenance and as such is setting standards for the industry as a whole—both the Public and Private Sectors. In doing so it is cooperating with the Construction Industry Standard Conference to ensure a rational and uniform approach is made.

The Institute, founded in 1951, has some 2500 members all of which are professionals in building maintenance management. The Institute has its own qualification structure designed by building maintenance managers for building maintenance managers and wishes to harmonise its own qualifications with the requirements of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications. The National Vocational Qualification process needs to bear in mind that the qualification must measure whether an individual can actually do a job and therefore the specification, the standards and the method of measurement must be carefully worked out in co-operation with all the interested organisations. The Institute is happy that its expertise in Building Maintenance Management has been recognised and feels it would be failing in its professional duty if it did not offer this expertise to others. Through a programme of National Seminars, held both in London and the Provinces, a Weekend School and its Annual National Conference, the Institute covers a wide range of topics directly relevant to Maintenance Management for the benefit of managers and potential managers throughout the industry. The Seminars and National Conference are also open to Elected Members of Local Authorities to assist them in the important part they play in the decision process.

It is widely accepted that relatively few people in the United Kingdom hold recognised qualifications for the work they do and it is expected that, after 1991, European Companies with highly qualified workforces will be in open competition for work in the United Kingdom. Unless UK Companies also employ appropriately qualified personnel, it is feared they will be unable to compete effectively and it makes sense, therefore, that individuals should be encouraged to update their competences and to obtain valid qualifications.

The IMBM qualification is actively concerned in promoting and improving standards in the industry and many employers recognise the value of the work the Institute is doing.

To meet the challenge the Institute offers programmes of study in Building Maintenance Management at Certificate and Diploma levels which lead to corporate membership of the Institute and are widely recognised as a sound professional base for employment. These programmes can be studied both in colleges or by distance learning programmes.

The pre-entry qualification for the Diploma Programme is Higher National Certificate, or similar qualification, in a building related subject. The syllabus includes all aspects of management, finance, planning, marketing and sales, information technology, materials, support services and industrial relations. The Certificate Programme is designed as a one year preparatory course for those who wish to study the Diploma Programme but do not have the necessary pre-entry qualifications.

Finally, as part of its policy of continuing Professional Development (CPD), the Institute encourages its members to produce their own personal CPD programme so that they may bring themselves up to date with technical changes and developments in maintenance management practice.

The Institute is prepared to meet the challenge, is prepared to help others to do so and is confident that it can make a worthwhile contribution to the nation's future both in this country and in Europe.

BUILDING CONSORTIA

EDUCATIONAL BUILDING CONSORTIA

Soon after the war the Hertfordshire County Council developed a "kit" of components for primary schools as an alternative to the huts which authorities were often being forced to use because of the shortage of basic building materials. Their work was carried forward during the early 1950s by the Ministry of Education (as it then was) and by commercial manufacturers. A number of "systems" were produced, in which the components, though highly standardised, could be assembled without modification to produce a variety of buildings. These systems were widely used.

In 1957, on the initiative of the Nottinghamshire County Council, a consortium of local authorities was formed with the title of CLASP (Consortium of Local Authorities, Special Programme) to develop a system using a light steel frame. Two advantages were that the system would be under the control of a client; and that, with the grouping of the requirements of a number of authorities, components would be produced in sufficient quantities to reduce costs.

Such was the success of CLASP that the consortium idea spread until it now covers a substantial part of the country. Some consortia (notably CLASP) are strongly committed to industrialising the building process wherever appropriate. Others are rather more concerned to rationalise traditional construction so as to obtain the best value for money in the context of a local building industry.

The general aims of these consortia are to obtain value for money by the co-ordinated procurement of components and to increase building productivity by rationalising the building process. Increasingly they also provide a service of advice to members on the care and maintenance of the existing building stock and on other technical matters. They are concerned mainly with educational buildings, particularly schools, but their methods are also used successfully for such buildings as fire stations, clinics and offices. A special feature of the CLASP system is that it is designed to deal with the problem of mining subsidence faced by a number of its members.

All the consortia are continuously engaged on the improvement and development of their building methods. They have informal organisations consisting of a board of chief architects meeting three or four times a year, a technical working party meeting approximately every month and usually an annual meeting of elected representatives of member authorities. Full members play an active part in policy making. Authorities whose requirements are too small, or sporadic, to justify full membership may join as associate members through the agency of full members or the Department of Education and Science. Members make a proportionate contribution to meet the cost of development work.

The consortia co-operate with the Department of Education and Science and with each other on work of common interest. DES are honorary members of all consortia.

The Civic Trust aims to stimulate action for the improvement of the built environment throughout the U.K. and encourage quality in town planning and architecture. The Trust is a registered charity founded in 1957 by the late Lord Duncan Sandys.

The Trust is supported by voluntary contributions and sponsorship. Individual and Corporate membership is available with associated benefits. It works in close co-operation with nearly 1,000 local amenity societies acting as a spokesman on issues of national concern.

The Trust fosters high standards of planning, design, restoration and new building. It makes annual Awards for good development of all kinds.

The Regeneration Unit has been set up to implement practical schemes of environmental improvement, economic growth and community involvement in several towns and inner city areas following pioneering projects in Wirksworth & Calderdale. Thorne, Ripon, Loftus, Brigg and Ulverston are amongst 30 other projects currently in progress.

The Trust is regularly consulted by Government about new legislation concerning the environment. (It inspired the Civic Amenities Act 1967 which created Conservation Areas.) Frequent published reports have focused attention on important issues such as urban wasteland and the problems and damage caused by heavy lorries. A magazine 'Heritage Outlook' is published bi-monthly. It organises annually national Environment Week.

The Civic Trust Education Group encourages environmental education.

There are Associate Trusts in the North East of England, Scotland and Wales. The Trust is also a founder member of the government's UK2000 initiative and has project offices in Liverpool and Bristol.

Patron: HRH The Prince of Wales, KG, KT, GCB, PC.

INSTITUTE OF MAINTENANCE & BUILDING MANAGEMENT

The Institute is the only professional organisation specifically representing the interests of the large number of officers in the Public Sector and of individuals in the private sector who are concerned with the management of building maintenance.

Founded in 1951 by senior building managers in Local Authority Direct Labour Organisations, it has grown steadily in size and influence. In recent years the membership has widened to include officers from other public bodies, as well as those maintaining public buildings by use of private contractors. In 1984 this widening role was recognised by a change of name from the Institute of Municipal Building Management and members from the private sector are now actively sought.

The Institute maintains close contacts with other professional bodies and organisations concerned with public building and maintenance, as well as with Local and Central Government Agencies.

The objectives of the Institute are to ensure the long term safeguarding of the national investment in public buildings and the service these provide to the general public by establishing and maintaining high standards of efficiency within building construction and maintenance managements.

The Institute operates a comprehensive professional training programme incorporating both technical and managerial packages which enable officers to undertake a full course of studies alongside their day to day duties. Educational and membership standards are maintained by an Examination Board and links with Technical Colleges. Additionally, seminars are regularly organised on topical subjects and there is an Annual National Conference and Weekend School. The Institute compiles and publishes a professional journal and a Year Book.

There are seven regions, each responsible for organising programmes of interest to the membership locally. The National Headquarters are at Farnham, Surrey.

President: J. P. Rees, Contracts Management Officer, City of Cardiff.

ASSOCIATION OF DIRECT LABOUR ORGANISATIONS (ADLO)

ADLO is an Association whose members are committed to providing Direct Services for their communities. It assists its member authorities with the provision of their services in the competitive environment that exists today.

The Association provides a wide range of services for its members which includes comprehensive briefings and publications on latest developments. It offers advice and research facilities, produces a regular journal and, in addition, works with other organisations to further the aims and objectives of Direct Services.

The Association organises seminars and conferences in order to educate, inform and promote its activities. It regularly provides briefings and statements for the press and media and lobbys on behalf of its membership with a wide range of outside bodies, including Central Government.

Over the years ADLO has built up both national and regional networks for those with an interest in Direct Services. Through its Secretariat in Manchester it co-ordinates and promotes the activities of the Association and as part of its brief it attempts to promote the best practice in the field of Direct Services. A sign of its success is the many enquiries ADLO receives from a wide range of organisations. ADLO is recognised as the expert in this field and therefore is contacted regularly.

An important recent development is ADLO's consultancy arm which provides a personal service for authorities who have identified specific tasks that need to be carried out. Recent assignments have included: tender evaluation, business planning, organisational reviews, specification writing, service profiling, and officer/member training.

ADLO has in membership 160 local authorities spread throughout the United Kingdom. This includes county, district, regional, metropolitan and London authorities. There are also eight associate members who share ADLO's aims and objectives.

ADLO has a strong regional base and the National Chair and Secretary are provided in turn for one year by each region. The National Chair for 1991/92 will be Councillor Fred Welsh of City of Dundee District Council. The National Director is Ian Smith. Principal Advisers are John Roberts and Greg Kaser.

The Secretariat and Resource Unit is situated on 6th Floor, Peter House, Oxford Street, Manchester M1 5AZ (061-236 8433; Fax: 061-236 6479).

BURIAL AND CREMATION

A Review by the Institute of Burial and Cremation Administration

The need to dispose of the dead was one of man's first problems and his choice of method was influenced by the facilities available. Many of the choices available then, and indeed still practised now in different parts of the world, would not be practical or acceptable, whether morally or by statute, in this country today. The bereaved public are further restricted by the availability of recognised facilities for the disposal of the dead. Even though the number of crematoria has steadily increased over the years, to 225, there are still a great many areas within the British Isles which have no access to cremation as a means of disposal of their dead. In other areas burial is becoming less readily available due to the closure of many old churchyards, the lack of available land for new cemeteries and the cost of providing burial facilities.

Statistics produced by the Federation of British Cremation Authorities record a total of 438,066 cremations for 1990, an increase of 413, or 2%, over the previous year. In contrast, the provisional number of deaths for the year is 627,484, a reduction of 2.78% compared with the 1989 figure of 645,444. The percentage of burials for 1990 is recorded at 30.2%.

No new crematoria were opened during the year, but a number are now in the planning stage and will, hopefully, see completion in the near future. Since the first cremation took place at Woking, in 1885, in excess of thirteen million cremations have been carried out. During the year the average number of cremations carried out was 1,948, with seven crematoria exceeding 4,000 cremations and twenty eight having less than 1,000.

Internationally, the percentage of cremations in the United Kingdom is only exceeded by Japan, where approximately 1,921 crematoria undertook 832,530 cremations (96.65%). Other countries with significant percentages of cremation are Czechoslovakia (54.78%); Denmark (66.10%); Holland (43.49%); New Zealand (54.90%); Sweden (61.10%), and Switzerland (56.78%).

The principal legislation for cremation is contained within the Cremation Regulations, 1930, as amended, but local authorities' cemeteries are operated under the more recent Local Authorities' Cemeteries Order 1977.

The vast majority of cremation authorities, both local authority and company owned, are members of the Federation of British Cremation Authorities. The Federation formulated the "Code of Cremation Practice", first published nearly fifty years ago and most recently revised in 1988, which has played a significant part in achieving the high standards of management, operation and sensitivity which apply at these crematoria. The role of the Federation is further enhanced by the annual programme of visits undertaken by its officers to selected crematoria.

In response to demand from its members, the Institute of Burial and Cremation Administration has now taken on a similar role, to that of the Federation, in respect of cemeteries. A Code of Professional Practice has been produced and adopted which, in addition to the Institute's "Code of Conduct", sets the standard of professional conduct required of its members, during the performance of their duties. A manual of "Cemetery Management" is also being prepared, which will hopefully become the training and reference manual for all managers of cemeteries, churchyards or burial grounds.

The Institute was founded in 1913 and remains active in all matters relating to services associated with the care and disposal of the dead. The IBCA has a long-established training programme leading to nationally recognised qualifications in this essential public service. This programme is currently being completely redeveloped, on a modular basis, to provide a higher standard of professional training and qualification and also to provide specialised training for other staff employed in connection with the disposal of the dead. In association with the Federation of British Cremation Authorities and the Local Government Management Board, or the Scottish Vocational Educational Council, the Institute supervises the training and examination of Crematorium Technicians. It is now a statutory requirement for crematorium technicians to be qualified and this course is recognised for this purpose by the Department of the Environment. In addition to providing quality training, the Institute also offers advice and guidance to all its professional members and has become the central point of reference for the management and control of cemeteries and burial grounds.

This year the IBCA and the FBCA celebrate their 50th Joint Conference; the first being held in Brighton in 1932. The event, this coming September at Southport, will also be the Federation's 64th and the Institute's 71st Annual Conference. It is at these Conferences, and the Educational Weekends, Training Courses and like events, that the Institute is able to direct attention to the care, concern to detail and expertise which must be exercised if the emotional problems associated with death, bereavement and the disposal of the dead are to receive appropriate consideration.

The Federation and Institute publish quarterly journals which are available to all those in membership and these periodicals give current news of developments, nationally and internationally, as well as technical information and comment.

During the past year both the Federation and the Institute have been occupied by the consideration and analysis of proposals contained within the Environmental Protection Bill, which was enacted as the Environmental Protection Act, 1990. This Act is a wide ranging piece of legislation which covers such matters as the collection and disposal of waste; powers to impose duties to keep public places, including cemeteries and crematoria, clear of litter and clean; powers to deal with abandoned trolleys; powers to deal with hazardous substances; to make provision for the identification and control of dogs, and many other matters of environmental importance.

The standards for crematoria have been set down in the Secretary of State's Guidance—Crematoria, which will be enforced under local authority air pollution control. These guidance notes, which were published in February, 1991, were prepared by a working party, including representatives from the Federation, after extensive consultation with the cremator manufacturers, the Cremation Society, the Institute, the Federation, the National Association of Funeral Directors, the Funeral Furnishing Manufacturers Association, the Institution of Environmental Health Officers and other interested parties.

It has become increasingly obvious that the eventual impact of the legislation on the cremation service will be significant. Management responsibility will increase and each Cremation Authority will incur very considerable expenditure to meet the new operating conditions. Crematoria will need to consider every aspect of their operation in order to comply with a wide range of demands including the achievement of strict emission levels, the provision of expensive monitoring equipment and adherence to predetermined cremator and flue specifications. The majority of cremation equipment currently operating in our crematoria, even if recently installed, will not comply with the new requirements. A maximum period of seven years, until 1998, will be allowed for essential upgrading, subject to initial authorisation, compliance with the Clean Air Acts 1956 and 1968 and Part III of the Environmental Protection Act (statutory nuisance provisions) and production of a programme for upgrading within six months of issue of the authorisation. The authorisation is dependent upon the existing cremator(s) being capable of meeting minimum requirements for smoke emissions. In addition the chimney height must meet, or be corrected within twelve months of issue of the first authorisation to meet, the specified requirements.

As a result of the increased awareness of the environmental impact of crematoria a renewed interest in cemeteries has become apparent over the past year. A further consequence of this awareness was a report of an alleged potential hazard of emission of mercury vapour from crematoria flues. The Department of Health stated that "At the temperature found in Crematoria it is unlikely that mercury will be vapourised and emitted from the stack. Whilst precise information is not available it is considered that the small amounts released into the atmosphere present a negligible risk to health".

The Church of England (Miscellaneous Provisions) Measure, which is due to become statute law, contains proposals to change the Church of England's law regarding funeral and burial practices. The main provisions include the placing of obligations on a minister of a parish to perform or arrange the performance of funeral services in crematorium; reference to Section II of the Cremation Act 1902 (incumbent not to be obliged to perform burial service) which shall cease to have effect; the extension of a person's right of burial in a churchyard to include the right to the interment of their cremated remains, and the declaration that a bishop of a diocese may consecrate land in the diocese for the sole purpose of burying cremated remains.

Competitive tendering still remains, and no doubt will continue for the foreseeable future to be, a recurring topic of conversation. Opinions are divided concerning its effect upon the service we operate, however feedback received does indicate that reduced standards and loss of the traditional flexibility of operation within our cemeteries and crematoria have occurred where the service has been subject to compulsory competitive tendering. Let us hope that this is not the thin end of the wedge that leads to the decline and end of the caring service we know and many hundreds of thousands of people need to use each year.

Relatives and other mourners have a right to expect an understanding and dignified service, whether disposal is by burial or cremation, which is flexible enough to allow variations in funeral services without in any way jeopardizing the basic codes of practice and statutory regulations. In an endeavour to assist with the sensitive disposal of foetal remains the Institute has formulated guidelines to permit their burial or cremation.

In addition to burial and cremation some authorities also provide a mortuary service and undertake funeral arrangements, where relatives are unavailable or unable to do so, under the provisions of Section 46 of the Public Health (Control of Disease) Act 1984. In these activities the Institute has national experience and has been able to give advice to authorities intending to revise the operation of these services, which are so closely associated with burial and cremation that the placing of responsibility with officers and departments other than those whose concern is with proper care and disposal of the dead has to be severely criticized. These are services which the bereaved public do not, and should not, expect to be associated with leisure, recreation, engineering, markets or similarly named local government departments with their stylised logo and words of exaltation which do nothing to help the mourning relatives and friends.

Finally, it is with regret that I must record the death of the Right Honourable the Lord Marshall of Leeds, on 1st November, 1990. Lord Marshall's direct association with the cremation movement spanned a period of seventeen years, during which time he was President of the Cremation Society, from 1982 until his death. His particular area of interest and expertise was in environmental matters in which he became an acknowledged expert. A more distinguished and committed supporter of the cremation movement one could not wish to find.

THE INSTITUTE OF BURIAL AND CREMATION ADMINISTRATION (Inc)

Secretary: R. N. Coates, FlnstBCA(Dip), The Gatehouse, Kew Meadow Path, Richmond, Surrey, TW9 4EN (081-876 8056).

President 1991/92 B. W. Swift, FlnstBCA(Dip)

The Institute was founded on 17th October, 1913, at a meeting held at the Kensington Town Hall, and was first known as The United Kingdom Association of Cemetery Superintendents. In 1917 the title was changed to that of The National Association of Cemetery Superintendents, and later to the National Association of Cemetery and Crematorium Superintendents as cremation became more widely accepted. At the Annual General Meeting in 1947, in preparation for a future application for Incorporation, the name was changed to The Institute of Burial and Cremation Administration and became Incorporated under Licence of the Board of Trade in August 1958.

The Membership of the Institute is contained within eight Branches, covering the whole of the British Isles. Each Branch meets at least three times each calendar year, and an Annual Meeting of all Members is held at the time of the Joint Conference of Burial and Cremation Authorities, arranged jointly by the Institute and the Federation of British Cremation Authorities.

The primary objects laid down at the first meeting were: "To promote the efficiency of cemeteries, a knowledge of the work appertaining thereto and to further the interests of the Cemetery Superintendent". Although they were extended in the Memorandum of Association on Incorporation, they are still the fundamental aims of the present Institute. Members seek to achieve its aims through its Branch activities, educational programme, technical advisory service, and publication of its Quarterly Journal and other literature dealing with Cemeteries and Crematoria, and with the disposal of the dead. The Institute holds annual administrative and technical examinations.

The business of the Institute is managed by a Executive Council, consisting of National Officers, and Branch Secretaries.

HM CORONERS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

The Home Office deals with those internal affairs in England and Wales which have not been assigned to other Government Departments. Among these affairs are cremations, burials and exhumations, including the law relating to Coroners' Courts, although HM Coroners are appointed by County Councils, except that, in Greater London and the former Metropolitan Areas, the coroners are appointed by the relevant council for each coroner's district.

The following list sets out the Coroners in Greater London and the county areas of England and Wales with, in brackets, the local authorities (i.e. District Councils) in each area of jurisdiction. An asterisk indicates that more than one Coroner is responsible within a District Council's area. Up to date information may be obtained by telephoning the Home Office on 071-213 7266

CORONERS' SOCIETY OF ENGLAND AND WALES

Hon. Sec: J. D. K. Burton, CBE, 7 Orchard Rise, Richmond, Surrey, TW10 5BX (081-876 5386).

The Coroners' Society of England and Wales was formed in 1846 to promote the usefulness of the office of coroner, to deal with questions of difficulty and to advance such amendments in the law relating to coroners as seemed desirable. There are 150 coroners, 24 of them have full time appointments. A coroner must be a barrister, solicitor or medical practitioner of at least five years standing. The coroner has a duty to inquire into violent, unnatural and sudden deaths and into treasure trove. They are appointed by the county councils to a county jurisdiction, but they are independent judicial officers and are answerable only to the Lord Chancellor. A coroner must appoint a deputy and may appoint an assistant deputy, both of whom must be similarly qualified.

The Coroners' Society has a joint negotiating committee with the counties, through the offices of LACSAB. Coroners' salaries and expenses are met by the county or nominated District or Borough; the public mortuary facilities used are provided by the district councils or by a local hospital. When a post mortem examination is needed, the coroner requests a suitably qualified pathologist to conduct it. The coroner can request further special examinations, if necessary.

The Coroners' Society holds regular meetings and conferences around the country.

THE CREMATION SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN

Address: Brecon Hse., 16A Albion Pl., Maidstone, Kent, ME14 5DZ (0622 688292/3).

Established in 1874, the Society was the pioneer of cremation in Great Britain. Built the first crematorium in this country; drew up code of practice which later was adopted as the basis of the first Cremation Act 1902. It is a founder member of the International Cremation Federation of which it is now the Secretariat, and is Great Britain's representative on its General Council. Now a registered charity, the Cremation Society is pleased to offer its free advisory service to all municipalities. The Society organises an annual conference for cremation authorities and in addition publishes a quarterly journal "Pharos International". It also issues a very useful "Directory of Crematoria". Further information is available from the Secretary.

Secretary: R. N. Arber.

CIVIL AVIATION

A Review by Bob Bird, Executive Secretary Joint Airports Committee of Local Authorities

1991 will be the 57th anniversary of the establishment of the Municipal Airports Committee of Local Authorities. The Committee was renamed the Joint Airports Committee of Local Authorities reorganisation in 1974 and is now open to membership by all local authorities in England and Wales who singly or jointly own and/or operate airports or own the shareholdings in the special type of companies created under the Airports Act 1986. The current membership is 27 airports involving no less than 60 local authorities. The range and diversity of airport facility is enormous embracing for example those providing facilities of the highest international standard and serving all continents and locations with grass strips used solely for general aviation.

The Joint Committee is an elected member body with each airport appointing a single member usually the Chairman of the relevant Board or Committee. The Committee is supported by a team of advisers covering a range of disciplines and including many airport directors and managers. The work is brought together by a small Secretariat operating from the AMA Headquarters at 35 Great Smith Street, London, SW1 (Tel. No. 071-222 8100).

Looking back to the review for 1990 civil aviation has had an unexpectedly difficult year. The anticipated problem in the Gulf materialised into a war situation which resulted in the curtailment or cancellation of the travel plans of people from all sectors of the population. The problem has been compounded by the deteriorating economic situation with widespread redundancies and substantially increased unemployment across Europe and a particularly serious situation within the United Kingdom. The anticipated further shake out in the mass holiday market came in the form of the loss of a major tour operator and its associated airline and the early part of 1991 saw the demise of numerous other albeit smaller tour operators.

The remainder of the mass holiday market has experienced a period of major retrenchment with the cancellation of hotel rooms and flights to all holiday destinations. It was only at the end of June, after a period of particularly poor weather within the UK, that holiday bookings started to pick up to fill the restricted capacity remaining. The demise of Air Europe the Airline previously referred to severely affected a number of regional airports and this together with the general decline in the market after so many years of growth has had its consequential effect on throughput and profitability.

The Joint Committee's 1990 Conference was hosted by Shoreham, one of the general aviation member airports, and held in Brighton. A range of papers by leading personalities in the aviation industry and by senior politicians was well received by delegates.

The 1990 report referred to the decision of Government to set up a special committee to consider the implications of the Civil Aviation Authority's recommendations in its report CAP 570, concerned with the alleged need for additional capacity in the South East. The Joint Committee was invited to Chair a Sub-Group of the Working Party to look specifically at regional airports. The declared aim of the main Group known as RUCATSE (Runway Capacity in the South East) is to test the Civil Aviation Authority's conclusion that the potential of regional airports will not affect the need for additional capacity in the South East in the early part of the next century. Membership of the Sub-Committee extends beyond member airports and includes the users, the airlines, the British Tourist Authority, CAA, and the several Government departments affected by the proposal including the Department of the Environment, Department of the Transport, and the Department of Trade and Industry.

The Joint Committee has also pursued the implications of airport policy in the South East through its own submission to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's Inquiry into the BAA's London airports. The Joint Committee's submission raised the question of unfair competition by Stansted together with the pricing out from Heathrow of flights from the smaller UK regional airports.

In July 1991 the CAA made proposals for the regulation of airport charges at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted for 5 years from 1st April 1992 by a capping formula. The extent to which the proposal will be varied during the consultation process will not be known until after this report goes to press.

The European Commission is increasingly influential in the aviation industry and the Joint Committee is further developing its own links with the Commission. Key issues which will dominate the agenda over the next 12 months include liberalisation, slot allocation, air traffic control, and duty free trade.

The Joint Committee is concerned that environmental policies are addressed by both airports and their owning authorities and during the year a Working Party was established to review the scope for advice.

Whilst the earlier paragraphs in this report refer to the short term difficulties being faced by airports and the aviation industry in general, local authority airports have continued to grow both in terms of throughput and facilities. Birmingham's second terminal known as Eurohub is scheduled to open in July 1991 and will have 10 jetty-serve gates and additional stands for commuter type aircraft. The Airport has an impressive range of scheduled and charter services and the new terminal is a partnership enterprise with British Airways. At Newcastle the international departure hall has been extended to accommodate the ever growing number of passengers and work has commenced on the extension of the Tyneside Metro to link the conurbation with the Airport. Phase III of Manchester's world freight terminal was completed in 1991 on a 6.5 hectare site. This is one of the finest facilities of its kind in the world with dedicated Boeing 747 parking stands which can accommodate varying combinations of smaller aircraft and a range of transit sheds with extensive facilities operated by airliners and freight operators.

1991 saw the commencement of work on the runway extension at Humberside International Airport where a new terminal extension was commissioned in October 1987.

Cardiff-Wales Airport undertook an extensive refurbishment of the terminal building between 1989 and 1990.

The growth pattern at local authority airports can be better appreciated by the following statistics:

Passenger movements	1986	1989
Birmingham	2,168,856	3,431,352
Newcastle	1,164,987	1,482,144
Leeds-Bradford	545,749	889,736
Luton	1,635,100	2,911,500

1990/91 has seen renewed threats by Government to the future of local authority involvement in the ownership of airports and airport companies. These developments are being carefully monitored by the Joint Committee which remains convinced that there are major benefits to be derived from the local authority ownership and that it is unacceptable for central government to require local authorities to sell or indeed to privatise.

One of the key tasks of those managing local authority airports is marketing. The case has been argued that unless the smaller airports take the initiative they may be in danger of contributing to road congestion by allowing too many of their potential passengers to use other large airports. The starting point is to establish the real catchment area and this can be established not only from statistics but from talking to the travel world, industry and commerce and most reliable of all, the actual passenger. The CAA produce statistics related to origin and destination of passengers. But it must be recognised that they do relate to defined areas and as an example the South East area extends as far as Oxfordshire. The potential market must be under continuous review as the introduction of new lengths of motorway, faster and more frequent rail services and, in certain areas, increased road congestion all influence journey times. The last report referred directly to the potential impact of the Channel Tunnel. Construction work is on schedule but in the second half of 1991 uncertainty remains as to how this major project will impact on the regions of the UK and doubt must exist as to whether a fast rail link will be available between the Tunnel and London before the turn of the century. It is inevitable that the Tunnel will have an effect on the use of air transport between certain points and increased attention must be given to the implications of the network of TGV services rapidly being developed in France and the continued interest in air/rail links with Germany.

The key issue for local authority airports looking forward to 1992 is undoubtedly the impending election and the effect that this may have on the clamour for a decision on what is perceived to be an urgent need for additional capacity in the South East and on Government's attitude to local authorities as owners or major shareholders in local airports.

JOINT AIRPORTS COMMITTEE OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES

35 Great Smith St., London, SW1P 3BJ (071-222 8100).

In 1966 the Joint Committee was set up by the former AMC, CCA and UDCA as a forum for the discussion of matters of concern and common interest to members of those Associations who operated aerodromes or who had an interest in them. Following the re-organisation of local government in 1974, the three new Associations—ACC, ADC and AMA—re-appointed JACOLA on the basis of one representative from each local authority airport owned or operated, and whether controlled by an individual authority, a joint committee, or a consortium. COSLA is now involved with representation in Scotland. JACOLA maintains links with Government, the EEC, CAA, and organisations connected with the industry.

Membership of JACOLA now consists of elected members representing Birmingham, Blackpool, Bournemouth (Hurn), Shoreham, Bristol, Cardiff, Carlisle, Coventry, East Midlands, Exeter, Staverton, Humberside, Ipswich, Isles of Scilly, Land's End (St. Just), Leeds/Bradford, Luton, Manchester, Newcastle, Norwich, Shetland, Southend, Swansea, Dundee, and Teesside airports. REGIONAL AND ZONE BOUNDARIES

Consequent upon the reorganisation of local Government in England and Wales under the Local Government Act 1972 revised Home Defence Regional and Zone boundaries were announced by the Government in January 1973. It was not possible to draw boundaries compatible with every peacetime grouping but an attempt was made to remove earlier inconsistencies without introducing too many changes in the pattern of the regions. The new groupings, which took effect on 1 April 1974, provide for a reduced total of 10 Regions and 17 Zones as follows:

Region	Zone	Counties
2 North	22	Cleveland, Durham, Northumberland, Tyne and Wear.
2 Yorkshire	21	Humberside, North, West and South Yorkshire.

3 East Midlands	31	Derbyshire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire.
	32	Leicestershire, Northamptonshire.
4 East	41	Cambridgeshire, Norfolk, Suffolk.
	42	Bedfordshire, Essex, Hertfordshire.
5 Greater London	51	Greater London.
6 South East	61	Kent, Surrey, East and West Sussex.
	62	Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Hampshire, Isle of Wight, Oxfordshire.
7 South West	71	Avon, Dorset, Gloucestershire, Somerset, Wiltshire.
	72	Cornwall, Devon.
8 Wales	81	Clwyd, Gwynedd.
	82	Dyfed, Mid, South and West Glamorgan, Gwent, Powys.
9 West Midlands	91	West Midlands, Staffordshire, Warwickshire.

THE ASSOCIATION OF CIVIL DEFENCE AND EMERGENCY PLANNING OFFICERS

Formerly, "The Association of Civil Defence Officers", it was founded at a meeting in St. Marylebone Town Hall, London, in 1952, as a professional organisation for all Civil Defence Officers.

Following the restructure of Home Defence activities in 1972, and the introduction of the term "Emergency Planning Officer", the Association added this name to its title. It remained, however, essentially the same organisation with its objectives being:—

"To promote the effectiveness of Civil Defence and Emergency Planning in the United Kingdom and to promote the professional interest of its members."

The current President of the Association is Sir Clive Rose GCMG who succeeded Air Marshal Sir Leslie Mavor KCB, AFC, DL, FRAeS, RAF in 1987.

Organisationally, the Association, whilst operating at national level, maintains a number of regional branches. These branches, as well as supplying representation for the Council of the Association, provide a framework for local activities such as talks, visits, studies and seminars.

Nationally the Council not only manages the affairs of the Association, but also establishes working groups to study various aspects of Emergency Planning. In addition, the Annual Study of the Association provides a forum for the exposition of various aspects of Civil Protection and an occasion when all who are interested in the subject, including the professionals, other local government officers, members, officers and members of other public bodies, delegates from industry, the Civil Service and Government, can come together and contribute to the building up of an effective Civil Protection system.

Hon. General Secretary: D. R. Norris CChem, MRSC, DMS, MICD, MBIM, Shire Hall, Mold, Clwyd, CH66NR (0352 2121).

Chairman: W. R. Holland, The Podium, Mulberry Hse., Canning Pl., Liverpool L1 8JB (051-708 5515).

COUNTY EMERGENCY PLANNING OFFICERS' SOCIETY

The County Emergency Planning Officers' Society was authorised as one of the professional societies of the then County Councils Association in September 1966. On Local Government reorganisation in April 1974, it continued as a professional society its main objectives being to promote the study of and the exchange of knowledge of Emergency Planning and to make representations thereon.

Secretary: N. B. Knocker, OBE, County Emergency Planning Officer, Wiltshire CC, County Hall, Trowbridge, BA14 8JE (0225 753641, Ext. 3510; Fax 0225 777424).

President: D. Moses, County Emergency Planning Officer, Hertfordshire CC, Goldings, Hertford SG12PY (0992 555670; Fax 0992 555671)

THE SOCIETY OF INDUSTRIAL EMERGENCY SERVICES OFFICERS

Formed in 1953, it is an independent and financially sound organisation, concerned specifically with Industrial Emergency Services matters, working closely with central and local government departments. The objects of the Society are, to promote the effectiveness of Industrial Emergency Services liaison and the exchange of ideas between members, and liaison between the Society and other organisations.

TRADING STANDARDS AND CONSUMER PROTECTION

A Review by the Institute of Trading Standards Administration

Towards a Single European Market

With 1992 fast approaching, the completion of the single market and European harmonisation has loomed large in the minds of all those involved with trading standards and consumer protection. The intention to remove all barriers to trade within Europe presents a huge challenge to the trading standards service and emphasizes its crucial role in ensuring the effective and equitable implementation of standards and consumer protection law. No other local government service will be so fundamentally affected by the changes, and there will be considerable resource implications in implementing the many new initiatives emanating from Brussels.

Safety Legislation

The first piece of consumer product safety legislation inspired by the European harmonisation process—the Toy Safety Regulations—came into force on 1st January 1990, and the Institute of Trading Standards Administration (ITSA) is still involved in detailed discussions with the Department of Trade and Industry and the toy industry to resolve questions of interpretation.

Trading standards officers are still discovering numerous examples of dangerous toys bearing the CE mark, which is supposed to certify that the product conforms to all binding community provisions applicable to it including, of course, all safety regulations. ITSA has long recognised that it is essential not only to have effective product safety laws but for these to be diligently and uniformly enforced throughout the community if such problems are to be overcome. It has made repeated representations to the European Parliament and the Commission urging greater involvement by the Commission in ensuring uniformity of enforcement by Member States.

However, trading standards officers also recognised early on that, whatever system eventually evolved, it would be necessary for them to have access to, and a dialogue with, their enforcement colleagues in Europe, if enforcement of the legislation was to be effective and uniform. The Institute was therefore delighted to support and be signatory to a declaration, signed in Amsterdam in May, creating a Product Safety Forum of Europe (PROSAFE). The group, consists of European non-food product safety law enforcement practitioners whose aims are the exchange of information and co-operation between European enforcement professionals and organisers in order to further develop mutual confidence and trust in the resolution of practical control problems.

Specifically on toy safety, trading standards officers also welcomed the major retail initiative by the British Toy and Hobby Manufacturers Association (BTHMA) and the British Association of Toy Retailers (BATR). Featuring the BTHMA's Lion Mark, a symbol of safety and quality, the scheme is designed to offer toy-buying customers a way of identifying shops where safety and quality can be assured. As well as guaranteeing that all toys sold in their stores conform to the Lion Mark standards, participating retailers will also be obliged to train their sales staff on subjects such as toy safety, age-grading and play value.

Another important initiative followed an agreement reached between ITSA and the fireworks industry during the latter half of 1990. Under this agreement, the industry funded a series of one-day training courses for trading standards officers concerning the interpretation and enforcement of fireworks regulations. The industry also provided a 24-hour help line during the run up to November 5th, which was used extensively.

Trading standards officers continue to play an increasingly important role in the standards making process, serving on very many British Standards Institution Committees, and on some of the Committees of CEN and CENELEC (the European Committee for Standardisation and its electrotechnical counterpart). They are also represented on the BSI Approved Standards Working Party, which recommends standards for approval by the Secretary of State.

The Hazardous Products Information (HAZPROD) database has continued to develop and expand during the year. This interactive database containing records of hazardous and potentially dangerous products is part of ITSA's computerised TS Link system, and, in combination with the Telecom Gold Electronic Mail System, allows rapid notification of immediate problems with unsafe products, as well as a comprehensively indexed reference source of past problems and of products which have been tested and found safe, saving local authorities the time and expense of testing the products themselves. Over 90% of UK trading standards authorities subscribe to TS Link, and several EC and EFTA countries now also either subscribe or have expressed an interest in doing so.

Food Safety

The introduction of the Food Safety Act during 1990 ensured that food safety remained a major concern, and trading standards officers were actively involved at all stages of the passage of the Bill through Parliament. Between mid-August and December 1990 ITSA received nineteen consultation documents for comment, and it is also represented on the Implementation Advisory Committee, which is responsible for producing the various Codes of Practice under the Act. The Committee is jointly sponsored by MAFF and the Department of Health and successfully brings together representatives from the various agencies responsible for food law enforcement.

The Motor Trade

Clocking, rebuilt write-offs and unroadworthy vehicles continue to be a major problem, with investigations into the various frauds and malpractices occupying more of trading standards officers' time than does any other trade sector. ITSA resurrected its draft Motor Trade (Consumer Protection) Bill, described in the last review, during the passage of the Government's 1991 Road Traffic Bill. ITSA Vice President, Gary Waller, MP, introduced amendments to improve motor vehicle safety by preventing car dealers from displaying unroadworthy vehicles for sale without making their condition clear, providing powers for trading standards officers to check that vehicles on garage forecourts were roadworthy, and preventing the resale of insurance "written off" vehicles without stringent tests. Having previously denied that there was a problem with rebuilt write-offs, following a Department of Transport survey the Government has had a change of heart and has agreed to look again at the issue. It has also brought forward measures concerning the sale of unroadworthy cars and the Department of Transport will provide funding for garage forecourt inspections.

Environmental Labelling

1990/91 saw an upsurge in "green" labelling, leading trading standards officers to turn their attention to an examination of the claims being made. There was much concern about the lack of definition for such wide claims as "environment friendly" and a widespread feeling that, given the Government's wish to develop an environmental labelling scheme, as well as developments in Europe, such general and meaningless terms should be entirely banned.

There have also been difficulties in finding experts to carry out tests and to give evidence in Court if necessary. Even when the experts have been found, the expense of testing may well be enough to deter many local authorities from carrying out a significant amount of work. To ease the burden, ITSA is looking for powers to be given to trading standards officers to require those making green claims to substantiate their statements. It is also investigating ways of helping enforcement officers to share experiences and co-ordinate their efforts in order to avoid duplication of expensive investigation and testing.

Estate Agents

Trading standards officers have long campaigned for the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 to be extended to cover misleading descriptions of property. They were, therefore, delighted when Mr Anthony Coombs, MP, with the support of the Consumers' Association, introduced The Estate Agents (Property Descriptions) Bill early in 1991. If enacted, the Bill, which now has Government support, will result in provisions, similar to those currently in the Trade Descriptions Act, applying to false descriptions of domestic property applied by persons engaged in estate agency work.

Consumer Credit and Misleading Prices

Trading standards officers are heavily involved in enforcing and advising upon the provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974, which aims to promote openness and honesty in money lending and protect consumers from false and misleading advertisements. ITSA liaises with the Office of Fair Trading on an ongoing basis, and is pressing for a more uniform enforcement of the Consumer Credit Advertising Regulations. It also made a detailed submission to the DTI in response to a consultation document on credit marketing, submitted detailed comments on the Draft Code of Practice, and held discussions with various consumer bodies on a range of issues.

The Institution also joined forces with LACOTS, the Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Trading Standards, to compile evidence of abuses of the controls on pricing for a report which was submitted to the Ministerial Prices Monitoring Committee (a body representing 31 organisations from business, consumer bodies and enforcement agencies) to be taken into account in the general review of the effectiveness of the prices legislation which the Minister will be undertaking later this year.

Consumer Education

The 1991 "Young Consumers of the Year" competition was sponsored by British Telecom. The finals were held at ITSA's annual Conference—held this year in Rotterdam to facilitate contact between UK enforcement officers and their counterparts from the rest of the EC and beyond. The Conference theme was "Achieving a Fair Market".

Pre- and Post-Qualification Training

During the last year two new venues were approved for the provision of training for the Diploma in Trading Standards, and two new examination centres were established for the Diploma in Consumer Affairs. Manchester Polytechnic has firmed its proposals for a Consumer Protection degree course, which will give exemption from a number of DTS papers, and will enrol its first students in September 1991. The year also saw the first batch of trainees funded by the grant scheme compete the DTS, leading to some thirty more officers joining the service than would otherwise have been the case. Work is continuing to try to get the scheme extended beyond its original five years.

Post-qualification education has also not been neglected, with a wide variety of courses being made available to trading standards officers and others, particularly on areas of new law or practice. In addition, a number of courses were held for those in trade and industry.

Metrology and Quantity Standards

A review of the year would not be complete without at least some mention of weights and measures issues. The year saw the first of the New Approach Directives in the field of metrology—the Non Automatic Weighing Instruments Directive, which will be implemented on 1st January 1993. The way in which this is implemented will inevitably determine the future of enforcement in relation to all weights and measures equipment as harmonisation progresses. The Directive raises a number of issues, not least how far manufacturers should be able to certify their own products, and, even more fundamentally, how the metrological role can best be undertaken in future. Other metrological issues considered during the year include metrication, sales of spirits on licensed premises, general requirements for electronic measuring instruments and installations for gauging road and rail tankers.

The Future

As will have been clear throughout this review, the greatest influence on the trading standards service at present is European harmonisation, and this will continue to be the case in the foreseeable future.

The trading standards service will continue to play a crucial role in this harmonisation process, striving to ensure that the result is an integrated market throughout Europe where the highest standards of safety and fair trading are effectively and uniformly enforced.

INSTITUTE OF TRADING STANDARDS ADMINISTRATION

4/5 Hadleigh Business Centre, 351 London Rd., Hadleigh, Essex, SS7 2BT (0702 559922)

Trading Standards Officers are employed by local authorities throughout the United Kingdom (except in Northern Ireland where they are retained by the Department of Commerce) to enforce that area of criminal law concerned with standards of fair trading, safety, quality and quantity. In addition many local authorities' officers provide advice and educational services to consumers and traders.

The Institute exists to promote the knowledge and training of its members; to advise government on necessary and desirable developments in pertinent legislation; to liaise with local authority associations on matters affecting the professional activities of its members; to liaise with trade associations and other bodies on matters of mutual interest; and to provide lectures and courses both for its members and other individuals and for trade associations on relevant matters. In pursuit of these objectives the Institute holds an annual conference, publishes a journal "The Trading Standards Review" and occasional research reports, and organises many training courses and seminars each year. Current membership is approximately 1,800.

Under their former title of "Inspectors of Weights and Measures", members of the Institute first formed a professional body in 1881 called "The British Association of Inspectors of Weights and Measures", which merged in 1894 with "The Incorporated Society of Inspectors of Weights and Measures". To reflect more properly the current wide-ranging duties of its members the present name was adopted in 1972.

Secretary: A. J. Street, FITSA.

President: The Lord Ezra, KBE.

Chairman: 1991-92 D. J. S. Hughes.

Director: Mrs G. Jordan, LLM.

THE ASSOCIATION OF PUBLIC ANALYSTS

For over one hundred years analytical services and scientific advice have been provided by Public Analysts. All County Councils, Metropolitan Districts and London Boroughs are required by statute to appoint a Public Analyst and an Agricultural Analyst with direct responsibility for all analytical aspects of enforcement of the Food Act and the Agriculture Act. Although the Society of Public Analysts was formed in 1874 it later embraced other analytical chemists who eventually greatly outnumbered the public analysts. In 1953, the independent Association of Public Analysts was formed to assist in upholding and maintaining the character and position of public analysts and official agricultural analysts and of the profession of analytical chemistry in the public service, to protect and advance the interests of public analysts and official agricultural analysts and to promote co-operation between them. A further objective of the Association is to maintain a service that will meet the need for adequate surveillance of food and manufactured products and of the effects on the environment of manufacturing and industrial processes. The main aim of the Association is not only to encourage, assist and extend the knowledge and study of analytical chemistry but also to provide a means whereby the public is adequately protected through unbiased scientific services.

The Director General of Fair Trading has a number of statutory functions under competition and consumer protection legislation.

Under the Fair Trading Act 1973 he reviews and reports on trading practices; encourages trade associations to adopt codes of practice; takes action against traders who persistently break the law; publishes material to help consumers; determines whether monopoly situations should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC), and advises the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether mergers should be referred to the MMC; and, as requested by the Secretary of State, he negotiates undertakings to implement the MMC's recommendations or findings and, subsequently, monitors those undertakings.

He is responsible for implementing the Consumer Credit Act 1974, including the licensing of businesses that provide credit or hire out goods.

Under the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976 he is responsible for maintaining the public register of registrable agreements and for taking appropriate action, including court action, on such agreements. Covert agreements are invariably referred to the Restrictive Practices Court.

The Director General is responsible for enforcing the prohibition of resale price maintenance under the Resale Prices Act 1976.

The Estate Agents Act 1979 gives him powers to ban individuals and firms from engaging in estate agency work if he considers them unfit to do so.

Under the Competition Act 1980 he has powers to investigate and report on suspected anti-competitive practices. These supplement his powers to make monopoly references to the MMC.

Under the Financial Services Act 1986 he has a duty to report to the Secretary of State on the effect on competition of the rules of regulatory bodies in the financial services sector. There are a number of other statutes which give him a broadly similar function to report to the Secretary of State on the effects of competition in particular sectors, notably legal services, auditing and broadcasting.

The Control of Misleading Advertising Regulations 1988 give him certain powers to seek a ban on some misleading advertising, when action by the Advertising Standards Authority or a Trading Standards Department has proved ineffective.

The Director General is also the United Kingdom competent authority (with the Secretary of State) on the application of the competition rules of the European Community.

NATIONAL CONSUMER COUNCIL

Chairman: Lady Wilcox

Director: Maurice Healy

20 Grosvenor Gdns, London, SW1W 0DH (071-730 3469; Fax 071-730 0191)

The National Consumer Council was set up by government in 1975 to give a vigorous and independent voice to consumers in the UK.

It is the Council's job to insist that the interests of all consumers, including the inarticulate and disadvantaged, are taken into account by decision-makers in business, industry, the public utilities, the professions, and in central and local government. The Council has no statutory powers, nor does it deal with individual consumer queries. It is funded by government to be the independent advocate of the consumer view, and it achieves this through a combination of sound research and persuasive campaigning.

The Council's research and policy recommendations, including wide-ranging work on the consumer interest in local authority, health and education services, are published in books and reports on sale from the Council's office. Please send for a catalogue.

The members of the NCC are appointed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

The special concerns of consumers in Scotland and Wales are dealt with by the Scottish and Welsh Consumer Councils; these are funded through the NCC and work closely with them but they decide their own work and priorities. There is a separate General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland.

The Chairman of the Council and its members are appointed by the Department of Trade and Industry, and are drawn from a wide variety of backgrounds to give a good spread of users' views.

The Post Office is obliged to ask for the Council's views on any major changes it wishes to make to its main services or prices. The Council can also report at any time on other matters concerning services and consider representations made to it by customers.

If the public have a problem or complaint it must first be taken up with the relevant business within the Post Office. The Office of Telecommunications (OFTEL) is an independent regulatory body set up under the Telecommunications Act 1984 (the Act), to ensure that there is fair and effective competition in the telecommunications industry, and to promote, in respect of prices, quality and variety, the interest of consumers, purchasers and other users of telecommunication services and apparatus.

OFTEL is a non-ministerial government department headed by the Director General of Telecommunications.

The Director General and OFTEL have the following functions to perform under the Act:

- (a) ensuring that holders of telecommunications licences comply with the licence conditions;
- (b) initiating the amendment of licences by agreement with licensees, or, failing that, on a licence amendment reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission;
- (c) exercising powers under the Fair Trading Act 1973 and the Competition Act 1980 in relation to telecommunications, to ensure that there is effective competition in the industry;

The Director General has a duty to consider representations from users of telecommunications apparatus and services; OFTEL investigates complaints in relation to telecommunications. The Director General is advised by national Advisory Committees for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, these in turn work with local Telephone Advisory Committees (TACs), voluntary bodies all over the UK which represent the interests of consumers. There are also two other advisory committees; one, known as DIEL, represents the interests of disabled and elderly people; the other, known as BACT, represents the telecommunications interests of small businesses.

The service includes detailed information about:

- | | |
|-----------------------------------|---------------------------------|
| ● who tendered for what and where | ● monitoring procedures |
| ● length of contract | ● default procedures |
| ● contract pricing | ● contract failures |
| ● value of successful tender | ● company financial information |
| ● basis of successful tender | ● market information |
| ● value of other tenders | ● Quality Assurance |
| ● performance bonds | ● type of service |

Regular survey reports and bulletins are circulated free to all authorities.

Further detailed information is available to nominated officers of authorities.

Special packages are available on request.

For information contact Jon Sutcliffe by mail, fax or telephone at LGMB 41 Belgrave Square, London SW1X 8NZ. Tel.071 235 6081
Fax 071 235 1257

The database is a central contact point through which local authorities can obtain basic information necessary for the tendering process. It is not a substitute for local research and decision making - the information from the database should be used as a guide to the suitability of potential tenderers only.

CONTRACTS

Under the Local Government Act 1988 all local authorities and some other bodies are obliged to place certain work out to tender. The Act extends compulsory competitive tendering to seven new "defined activities" with power for the Secretary of State to add further activities to the list by order.

A local authority may not carry out prescribed functional work (i.e. in house) after a date specified by the Secretary of State unless six conditions are satisfied.

Briefly the conditions are:—

1. The authority must advertise the tender in the local and trade press.
2. The periods, place, time and charge specified in the notice must be reasonable and the detailed specification made available for public inspection.
3. If anybody expresses interest the authority must invite bids not less than three months and not more than six months after the press notice. The authority must invite at least three private firms expressing an interest to submit a tender.
4. Before carrying out the work itself an authority must require its own direct labour organisation to prepare a written bid.
5. Before deciding to carry out the work "in house" the authority must ensure that it has not acted in a manner such as to restrict, distort or prevent competition.
6. The authority must comply with the detailed specification.

Each authority is obliged to prepare financial reports of these activities for each year from April 1989 and to make these available for public inspection. The Act lists a series of powers available to the Secretary of State to ensure that each authority complies with all the conditions of the Act together with penalties which can be imposed should the authority fail to comply.

The above is a very brief description of the Act and as such cannot be definitive. Readers looking for specific information should refer to the Act itself.

Compulsory tendering, under statute, began 1/8/89 and was scheduled to proceed in six stages made up of a mix of types of authority and types of activity. This volume includes contracts put out to tender on 1/1/91. Two more stages then remained with an introductory date of 1/8/91 and 1/1/92.

The lists which follow indicate the person in each authority who should be regarded as the first line contact point for information about contracts in general. Also authorities have been asked to provide the main contracts they have let and to whom together with the annual value of each contract and the year of its expiration.

An extensive survey is conducted twice yearly by the Local Government Management Board, 41 Belgrave Sq., London, SW1X 8NZ (071-235 6081). A summary of the information is published in a Survey Report and is available for purchase. A comprehensive and detailed analysis is held on a data base by the LGMB access to which is confined to local authorities only.

An interesting summary of the overall allocation of contracts appears in the April 1991 Survey Report No. 3 issued by the Local Government Management Board and published with its agreement.

MUSEUMS AND ART GALLERIES

A Review by C. J. Newbury, BA, PGCMS, FMA Deputy Director, Museums & Galleries Commission

Two reports were published during 1991 which focused attention on the relationship between local authorities and museums. The first to appear was the Audit Commission's The Road to Wigan Pier?—Managing Local Authority Museums and Art Galleries. This was followed closely by the Museums and Galleries Commission's report titled Local Authorities and Museums which examined not only direct provision, but also the support given by local authorities to independent, university and armed services museums.

The Museums and Galleries Commission (MGC) and the Audit Commission have both adopted a similar approach towards a policy framework for museums. The MGC stresses the need for all local authorities with museum powers to adopt formal policies towards museums. There may be many reasons why local authorities support museums—preservation of the cultural and natural heritage, the provision of an educational and recreational resource, the encouragement of economic development and tourism, and the promotion of social cohesion. The Audit Commission recommends that each local authority needs to be clear about its own objectives in supporting museums. The development of museum policies is particularly important bearing in mind that museums are a discretionary function of local authorities. In Scotland the provisions of the Local Government and Planning (Scotland) Act, 1982 have encouraged Districts and Islands to adopt suitable policies because each authority has a duty to ensure adequate cultural provision for the inhabitants of its area. It would be desirable if similar legislation applied to other parts of the United Kingdom.

One of the great features of local authority museum provision is its diversity. At one end of the scale there are small "community museums" of recent foundation which tend to concentrate on local history, while at the other extreme there are large multi-disciplinary institutions with collections of national or even international importance which date back to Victorian times, or even earlier. This diversity does not mean however, that it is impossible to promote minimum standards which apply to all types of museums. The MGC's Registration Scheme for Museums in the United Kingdom gives a seal of approval to those museums which can demonstrate that they have an appropriate constitution; a sound financial basis; adequate collection management standards, public services and facilities; and access to professional curatorial advice. The initial phase of Registration is due for completion in 1992 and the response to the Scheme has been excellent. Many museums have adopted acquisition and disposal policies for the first time while others have significantly improved their documentation systems, identified backlogs and produced strategies to deal with the backlogs.

The success of the Registration scheme has been acknowledged by the Audit Commission and Registration Standards now feature strongly in the guidelines which it issues to auditors. The Audit Commission's report The Road to Wigan Pier? emphasizes the need for local authorities to adopt a systematic approach to reviewing museums. This is especially important at a time when museums are facing new pressures. Firstly, discretionary services such as museums are coming under considerable scrutiny following the introduction of the community charge and museums need to demonstrate that they offer value for money. The demise of the community charge will not alter this situation. Secondly, museums have to reappraise the support they provide to schools to ensure they meet the needs of schools as they implement the national curriculum. Local management of schools raises questions about the funding of this support. Finally, there is the pressure created by Registration because failure to achieve full or provisional Registration Status will render museums ineligible for grants from the MGC or Area Museum Councils.

A key outcome of reviewing the museum service should be the production of a business or forward plan, which should be re-appraised regularly. The Audit Commission takes the view that the plan should give proper weight to the need for conservation, scholarship and research, but be firmly customer oriented. It considers market research to be an essential input to reviews and recommends that business plans should include appropriate performance measures. The Audit Commission also recommends that, wherever possible, authorities should divest themselves of objects which do not fit their collection policies. The Museums Association's Code of Practice for Museum Authorities however, states that there should be a "presumption against disposal" and this policy has been adopted for the MGC's Registration Scheme. The crucial point is that local authorities hold museum collections in trust for the benefit of both present and future generations. There may be sound curatorial reasons for disposing of objects from a collection (although a number of museums and art galleries have come to bitterly regret the short-sighted or ill-judged actions of previous curators) and the Registration Scheme sets out a procedure to be followed in those circumstances. What concerns the museum profession is the spectre of "asset-stripping"—the sale of collections to raise money for general local authority expenditure. This is regarded as a betrayal of public trust and likely to result in a drying up of donations to the collection. The MGC's Registration Committee has already de-registered one local authority museum service that has followed this course of action.

Local authority museums are still described by some people as "worthy but dull". In many cases this is an absolute travesty of the truth, considerable investment having been made in recent years to improve public displays and facilities. More could be done however, if government grants through the MGC and Area Museum Councils were more generous. Although the term "matching grant" is still in use, nowadays this rarely means 50%. The MGC's capital grant fund for museums in England only amounts to some £300,000 a year, a sum that could be swallowed up quite easily by a single project. As a result, a series of token grants are awarded which are chiefly useful to the recipients as a validation that their project is well regarded by a national body. This often means that additional funding support can be gathered from elsewhere.

To improve standards in museums also requires a commitment to training. Following the MGC Report Professional Training and Career Structure (1987), a new independent organization called the Museum Training Institute (MTI) has been established with funding from the Office of Arts and Libraries. As the Industry Lead Body, the MTI is currently defining occupational standards in the sector and in due course, vocational qualifications will be gained by successful completion of accredited courses based on these standards. The work-based qualifications will be "hall-marked" by the Scottish Vocational Educational Council in Scotland and by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications in the rest of the United Kingdom. Training will be available for everyone from directors to attendants and all staff in between, whether working in a large national or small independent museum. Local authority museum staff have traditionally formed the core of professionally trained museum staff in the UK. Nevertheless, very few museums have undertaken regular training needs analysis of their staff or developed specific training policies for their organizations. Training budgets are often pitifully small and outwith the direct control of museum managers. The MGC Report Local Authorities and Museums calls for this situation to be redressed and recommends that at least 2% of a museum's staffing budget should be devoted to training.

A number of local authorities have "hived-off" the management of their museums to charitable trusts, while retaining ownership of the collections. The advantages and disadvantages of devolution to trusts have been clearly set out by the Audit Commission. The advantages can be summarized as follows. Firstly, the trustees will be committed to the museums, while museums often have a low priority in local authorities. Secondly, trust museums can gain access to grants from charities for which local authorities are not eligible. And thirdly, trust museums have the freedom to operate outside local authority procedures, standing orders and conditions of service. On the other hand, there is the disadvantage that long-term commitment may be uncertain and dependent on the enthusiasm of a few individuals. Furthermore, trust museums may depend on revenue grants from local authorities to balance the accounts, but authorities under financial pressure may find it easier to terminate grants than to abandon in-house services. Trust museums will also tend to lose access to the range of expertise and support available within an authority. Finally, there is the disadvantage that the local authorities may influence the objectives of trust museums but they cannot set them. Experience has shown that devolution to a trust will only be successful if a local authority continues to demonstrate strong support for the museum.

Competitive Tendering (CCT) has only had a limited effect on museums so far; the main impact falling on catering and cleaning. There is some concern that CCT may be extended to security services in museums because the experience of using private contractors both in the U.K. and the U.S.A. has often been highly unsatisfactory. The attendants or warders who provide day-time security are also at the front-line when dealing with visitors. The training of attendants involves the development of a wide range of skills and there are considerable advantages in retaining a dedicated and experienced in-house workforce. There are also fears that CCT may be applied to local authority museums as complete services. Once again, the complex range of inter-related skills required to operate a museum and the fact that local authority museums are geared primarily to providing a community service suggests that the extension of CCT to museums would not be in their best interests.

The contribution which local authorities make in support of university, independent and armed services museums is often underestimated by casual observers of the museum scene. There have been several instances recently when local authorities have come to the rescue of university museums facing imminent closure. On a more modest level, local authorities sometimes provide grants towards educational services to towards the employment of attendants so that more galleries can be opened to the public that would otherwise be the case. These grants are often made to university and independent museums of regional or national importance which attract considerable numbers of tourists and represent a significant cultural resource. The discretionary nature of the grants makes them vulnerable to cuts by local authorities suffering financial problems and the MGC views this situation with increasing concern.

A recent survey of local authority museum spending plans for 1991-92 published in the Museums Journal (June 1991) shows that approved budgets are extraordinarily varied. Some museums are planning substantial growth in services, staffing and expenditure, while at the other extreme at least one important museum service faces virtual dismemberment and some others face massive percentage cuts with grave consequences in terms of service provision. The survey shows a close correlation between spending plans and the relative harshness or generosity of the authority's Standard Spending Assessment (SSA), and the consequent risk of poll-tax capping for setting either a budget or a poll tax level (or both) in excess of government calculations. A more sensitive method of calculating the SSA which took account of an authority's actual level of museum provision would be highly desirable. The survey also revealed massive backlogs of urgent capital works on existing buildings to bring them up to an acceptable standard. Again, the determining factor in relation to capital expenditure on museums, seems to be more the accident of capital spending limits or authorization, money from property disposals, or funding by a private developer as a "development gain", rather than as the result of any national policy. The authors of the survey report conclude that "the complete replacement of the present capital funding system is just as urgent as the reform of local government revenue funding".

MUSEUMS ASSOCIATION

34 Bloomsbury Way, London, WC1A 2SF (071-404 4767; Fax: 071-430 0167).

Founded in 1889 to facilitate the exchange of views between members of museum staffs and others, to promote the establishment and better administration of museums and galleries and to improve the qualifications and status of museum staff. It represents the governing bodies of all types of museum—national, local government, university, trustee and private, eligible for Institutional membership, and professional museum staff classified as Fellows, Associates and Ordinary members. There is a further category of supporting members, both personal and institutional. Publications: Museums Journal (monthly), Museums Yearbook (annual) and (occasional) other papers. Jointly initiated the Museum Training Institute, formed in April 1989 to develop a coherent strategic plan for museum training in the United Kingdom. Holds an annual conference and occasional seminars. It maintains links with UNESCO and the International Council of Museums and collaborates with the Museums and Galleries Commission, the Arts Council, the Council for British Archaeology, the Local Authority Associations, the Countryside Commission and similar organisations in related fields of study. The Association works closely with the Area Museum Councils which provide, with the aid of central government grant-in-aid, technical and advisory services to museums in their areas, with the Regional Museum Federations and with the specialist professional groups in affiliation.

MUSEUMS AND GALLERIES COMMISSION

16 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AA (071-233 4200; Fax 071-233 3686)

Established in 1931 as the Standing Commission on Museums and Galleries, the Commission was renamed and took up new functions in September 1981. The MGC consists of Chairman and 14 Commissioners appointed by the Prime Minister and representing all parts of the UK. It is funded by the Office of Arts and Libraries (OAL), and has an annual budget of £11m. Nearly 85% is distributed in grant form.

The MGC advises Government, including the Department of Education for Northern Ireland, the Scottish Education Department and the Welsh Office, on museum affairs. It is the only such body concerned with all museums and galleries in the UK. In addition, the Commission has executive functions which include the services of the Museums Security Adviser; funding of the 7 Area Museum Councils (AMCs) and the Museum Documentation Association; administration of capital grant schemes for non-national museums, and channelling of funds to Tyne and Wear Museums Service and the Geffrye and Hormiman Museums following abolition of GLC and Metropolitan County Councils. The MGC administers the arrangements for government indemnities and the acceptance of works of art in lieu of inheritance tax. It offers advice on arrangements for Private Treaty Sales, and has responsibility for two Purchase Funds for local museums administered on its behalf by the V&A and Science Museums.

More recently the MGC established a Conservation Unit and an information service on travelling exhibitions, and is currently, with the assistance of Area Museum Councils, implementing a Registration Scheme for museums in the UK. A Disability Adviser has also joined the MGC to promote understanding and better provision for disabled people in museums. An environmental adviser is devising guidance on environmental standards in museums.

The Commission publishes an Annual Report and detailed reviews on professional topics of current concern. A report on The National Museums was published in 1988, a report on The Museums of the Armed Services in 1990 and a report on Local Authorities and Museums will be published in 1991.

AREA MUSEUM COUNCILS

The Area Museum Councils are ten regional organisations which support and promote the work of museums in their regions. They give independent professional advice and help, and offer a strategic overview of museum development.

AMCs provide a wide range of services to their member museums, all designed to improve care of collections and to widen public access. These services include advice and information, improvement grants, conservation and other technical services, touring exhibitions, training and help with marketing, display, education and collections management.

The AMCs are independent charities, governed by the museums they serve. The great majority of local authorities and of independent museums are in membership of their AMC.

AMCs receive an annual grant via the Museums & Galleries Commission (£3.3m in 1991-92), plus membership subscriptions and charitable and corporate support. Most of their services are recharged and AMCs are run on a business basis.

AMCs seek to raise standards and to influence a more rational and effective pattern of service to the public.

THEATRESSTANDING ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON LOCAL AUTHORITIES AND THE PERFORMING ARTS

26 Chapter St., London SW1P 4ND (071-233 6868).

The Standing Advisory Committee On Local Authorities And The Performing Arts (SACLAPA) is made up of 8 representatives appointed by the Theatres Advisory Council, 6 each by the Association of District Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, 3 by the Association of County Councils 3 by the Association of Local Authorities of Northern Ireland, 2 from the National Music Council of Great Britain and 2 from the Arts Development Association. The Arts Council of Great Britain provides an observer.

SACLAPA's objectives are to bring together representatives of local authorities and the performing arts to discuss matters of common concern; to give information and advice to local authorities on performing arts and to hold conferences and publish literature as appropriate.

Joint Secretaries: Gordon McCartney, Secretary of the ADC, 26 Chapter St., London, SW1P 4ND and Sir Ashley Bramall, Hon. Secretary of TAC, 4-7 Great Poultny Street, London W1R 3DF.

THEATRES TRUST

10 St. Martin's Ct., London WC2N 4AJ (01-836 8591).

The Theatres Trust is a statutory body set up 'to promote the better protection of theatres for the benefit of the nation'. The Trust must be consulted by all planning authorities before they issue a decision on any planning application affecting a theatre, used or disused. In all its work the Trust's principal objective is not simply to see buildings preserved but to safeguard their live theatre use—or potential for such use.

Although its responsibilities cover the regions, as well as London, the Trust is minimally staffed and has only small government grants to supplement its small income and fund its work. Supporters may join its Friends organisation.

Life President: Lord Goodman, CH.

Chairman: Sir David Crouch.

Deputy Chairman: G. Laurence Harbottle.

Consultant: Lord Jenkins of Putney.

Director: John Earl.

CIVIC THEATRES

The list of Civic Theatres set out below has been compiled from replies to a general enquiry addressed to local authorities in March 1989. It purports to show the extent of the involvement of local government in the management of theatres and whether financial support is given annually thereto by rate fund contributions. It also attempts to indicate whether some form of subsidy is given (not necessarily on an annual basis) by the Arts Council of Great Britain or the Regional Arts Associations. The hope is that this information will enable particular local authorities to appreciate the extent of theatre management at the expense of the annual rate levy, and the scope for any specific lines of enquiry they may wish to pursue in this field.

It is clear from the list that not all civic theatres receive annual assistance from the Arts Council or the Regional Arts Associations. Indeed, the Arts Council of Great Britain states that it does not subsidise theatres directly managed by a civic authority, but may give support on an annual basis to independent drama companies administered on a non profit-distributing basis, and which are registered as charities.

The Civic Theatres are listed in alphabetical order of the local authorities with the names of theatres in a lighter bold faced type.

The letters thereafter indicate:

- (a) financial support from the General Rate Fund each year;
- (b) financial support from the Arts Council and/or the Regional Arts Associations;
- (c) the theatre is open throughout the year;
- (d) the theatre is managed by a Trust, upon which the local authority is represented.

The name and address of the manager, or responsible officer, is added.

B—Borough Council.

CONFERENCES AND EXHIBITIONS

BRITISH ASSOCIATION OF CONFERENCE TOWNS

The British Association of Conference Towns, founded in 1969, is an organisation linking local authorities in England, Northern Ireland, Scotland, Wales, The Isle of Man and Channel Islands with the British Tourist Authority and National Tourist Boards.

The association's primary function is to promote Britain as a meeting, conference, exhibition and incentive destination to potential British and international clients.

In addition, BACT aids and encourages its members to develop and constantly improve their own facilities and services and, in turn, those of the service industries operating in their administrative areas. It also stimulates the provision of better equipped, operated and marketed venues that meet the needs and special requirements of the professional conference organiser.

The association operates a free venue finding service to assist any organisation wishing to locate a suitable venue for their specific requirements. BACT also offers training courses for its members, and a consultancy service to any local authority looking to develop further in the business tourism sector.

1st Floor, Elizabeth House, 22 Suffolk Street, Queensway, Birmingham B1 1LS (Tel: 021-616 1400).
Director: Tony Rogers.

THE ARTS COUNCIL OF GREAT BRITAIN

14 Great Peter St., London, SW1P 3NQ (071-333 0100; Fax 071-973 6590)

Chairman: Lord Palumbo.

Secretary-General: Anthony Everitt.

The objects of The Arts Council of Great Britain as defined by the 1967 Royal Charter are to develop and improve the knowledge, understanding and practice of the arts; to increase the accessibility of the arts to the public throughout Great Britain; and to advise and co-operate with government departments, local authorities and other bodies on any matters concerned, whether directly or indirectly, with the foregoing objects.

The Arts Council also administers the South Bank Arts Complex, including the Hayward Gallery, the Wigmore Hall, the Serpentine Art Gallery, the National Poetry Library and a library of arts and videos for hire.

The Arts Council does not have regional offices but operates through a network of 12 independent bodies, the Regional Arts Associations. (See below).

REGIONAL ARTS BOARDS

A network of Regional Arts Associations now covers England and Wales but they owe their existence less to a pre-determined national strategy than the initiative of groups of local authorities and other bodies. Regional Arts Boards are independent and autonomous bodies; they are neither regional branches of the Arts Council as is sometimes imagined nor are they purely local authority associations, but they work in partnership with both. They are concerned with all the arts—community arts, dance, drama, film, literature, music, opera, visual arts—and they combine at a regional level the work of the various national agencies such as the Arts Council of Great Britain, British Film Institute and Crafts Council which together provide most of their funds.

Generally Regional Arts Boards work through others but they are also concerned with the direct provision of arts events in those areas where no existing organisation is capable of promoting them. Regional planning and co-ordination is an integral function of the RABs and they work closely with local authorities over a wide range of activities including capital projects through the Arts Council of Great Britain's Housing the Arts Fund and the regional touring of major professional companies. The other principal services provided by the Regional Arts Boards are grant-aiding (including financial support for theatres, orchestras, arts centres, festivals and community arts), publications and publicity, advice and research; consumer subsidy; and help for artists.

Local authorities have discovered that support for and co-operation with Regional Arts Boards enables them to realize the promotion and development of their arts services to maximum effect. In addition they provide an effective means whereby the Arts Council of Great Britain can progressively devolve responsibility for many activities thereby involving the regions in the allocation of national resources or funds in their areas.

PUBLIC LIBRARY SERVICES

A Review by Anthony L. Bamber, on behalf of the Public Libraries Group of the Library Association

Change is no longer a gradual process. Public libraries have long been accustomed to functioning in a world where change has tended to be evolutionary: where experiments in new structures or services have led to a re-orientation of action and perception and where movements in society have resulted in amendments to stock acquisition and exploitation. The process has tended to reflect the nature of the public librarian's intimate contact with local communities which has monitored change, evaluated services and proposed development—all within a benevolent atmosphere of local authority service. Almost overnight the gales of financial "reality", which seem to have blown up from the introduction of business rates and the community charge, are sweeping away the bases of long-term planning and security of principle upon which public library services have been built and developed.

In 1992, with its emphasis upon the Single European Market, the need for flexibility of mind and practice is greater than ever. The pace of change is growing and those who fail to keep up appear doomed forever to the recesses of history as "progress" passes them by. There is a crisis of confidence in local authorities which is amply reflected in the public library service as libraries are closed, opening hours reduced, stock purchases limited, new charges introduced and due obedience is made to the new gods of performance measures, income generation and average costs per capita. In such a world premiums on vision, belief, confidence and anticipation are set at an all-time low.

The public library tradition, built up assiduously over a century and more since 1850, has been dedicated to providing an unbiased access to the sources of ideas, imagination and information that are necessary to ensure the freedom of the individual to learn, understand and contribute within a democratic society. For most of that time the sources of knowledge were almost synonymous with the printed word—in book, pamphlet, newspaper or journal—and are often still equated with the remit of a library. Indeed chief librarians of public library authorities have given attention to the problems associated with book purchase at a time of higher levels of publishing and dwindling financial resources, while generally pursuing a policy of charging for non-book materials. It has taken an initiative of the government's Training Enterprise and Education Directorate to draw fresh attention to the founding principles of public library service by making available both pump-priming finance (and national publicity about its effectiveness) for the provision of open and flexible learning multi-media packs in public libraries. These packs cost between £30 and £500 and in financial terms are the modern equivalent of the informative monograph in the latter years of the 19th century; at that time the public library provided the gateway to knowledge by meeting the bill, but even the TEED initiative failed to provide access to the more expensive packs. This initiative is being passed on to the new Training and Enterprise Councils, if local public librarians can take the opportunity. It seems sad that the Office of Arts and Libraries has remained outside this visionary development.

Indeed, the OAL, whose Minister is charged with the statutory remit to superintend the public library service by the Public Libraries and Museums Act, 1964, has been more concerned in recent times with the imposition of management objectives and performance targets than with any real understanding of public library purpose. In a response to a formal delegation from the Library Association the Minister for the Arts, the Rt. Hon. Timothy Renton, MP, suggested that local authorities might welcome the opportunity to "rationalize" their library service in a way which public pressure had prevented them from doing in the past—presumably an invitation to close libraries, reduce services and impose the highest possible level of charge on any provision not bearing the label "book loan". The ability of local authorities to level such charges was foreshadowed in the Local Government and Housing Act, 1989 and developed via a Statutory Instrument. Some authorities have begun to interpret these powers in ways which could well undermine the future ability of library services to continue to provide access to the comprehensive library service which remains the legal right of all who use a public library.

No one local library, and no individual library authority, can, from its own resources alone, hope to provide a comprehensive library service. This fact has long been acknowledged as both inevitable and also a challenge. The challenge has been met by the development of the sophisticated (albeit voluntary) network of library co-operation at both regional and national level; its effectiveness and value acknowledged by the inclusion within the 1964 Act of "provisions directed to the promotion of inter-library co-operation".

Despite any formal implementation of these powers their inclusion in the legislation has meant that the voluntary network of co-operation has been supported by all library authorities, as well as by the governing bodies of almost all other significant libraries in the country, in order to ensure that the individual library user is afforded equality of access to the resources of knowledge—as recorded by the printed word. With the ability to charge for many library services has come the introduction of a premium that is charged to obtain a book from another local authority or other library source. Such a charge both negates the principle of the comprehensive service and the voluntary co-operative action in support of it; worse; it has the potential (if widely adopted) to destroy the very service it seeks to support and its small contribution to income generation would hardly provide even the finger in the dyke against the potential floods of higher expenditure.

Support from the Office of Arts and Libraries could provide the opportunity to move this valuable level of co-operation forward into the developing and educationally important areas of non-book materials, but again, sadly, the OAL prefers to abstain from such involvement.

Despite the difficulties the demand for public library services continues and, although a curious panoply of controls on capital expenditure continues to inhibit library building development, it was encouraging to see within the space of twelve months new library buildings in such significant centres of population as Cardiff, Perth, Bath, Evesham, Lichfield and Peterborough: what is more it was not unusual to find members of the Royal Family involved in their opening ceremonies. Alongside the new buildings there are the new technological developments.

The myth that librarians deal with books is increasingly being dispelled by their use of computer technology, on-line databases, video recordings (including sub-titled videos for the deaf), sound recordings, computer software and CD Rom. This list is by no means comprehensive, but many of the changes are encouraging public librarians to look more widely at the nature of the information services they provide and the abilities that many technological developments can offer in the provision of cost effective services.

Cost effectiveness has been very much at centre of concerns about the provision of School Library Services by local authorities. Local management of schools is resulting in many local authorities devolving budgets to Headteachers whom in turn, must buy back School Library Services. At a time of declining financial resources there is a great temptation for teachers to cut even further into the frequently low amounts invested in the provision of books and learning materials. School Library Services provide an extraordinary valuable resource which allows the same material to be re-used in different schools. This frequently means that for every £1 spent on a co-ordinated service a school can avoid the expenditure of £9 from its own resources. In response to the challenge of devolved management flexibility and innovation have become central components of working practice, as is demonstrated amply by the response of Kent County Library in re-thinking its School Library Service and generating a customer-centred marketing strategy, which invites schools to buy in to a clearly-defined service with attractively presented products.

Despite the huge amounts of effort and publicity that are now being devoted to such promotions by library authorities across the land there remains but little guarantee that they will result in sufficient short-term success needed to preserve cost-effective services. Should these efforts fail there will be no service available by the time that the full effects of its absence are realized.

In other respects the place of the book within the broader view of national education remains widely acknowledged. Education reforms have changed the responsibilities of school governors dramatically: at the same time there has been a rash of training initiatives and publications to help the new governors to exercise these responsibilities. Many public libraries have been involved in such initiatives, frequently providing space and administration of training collections and using their community base to contribute to the availability of a training initiative. Similar comments can be made about the involvement of public libraries in Adult Literacy Year and their development of reading schemes (e.g. "Well Worth Reading"—in Hampshire, Dorset and West Sussex or "Booktide" in Dyfed). The Hertfordshire Fiction Festival, undertaken in co-operation with Eastern Arts, is another example of the same motivation serving the wider interests of community well being.

The community base of the public library service was demonstrated dramatically in February 1990 when the communities of Kinmel Bay, Towyn and Pensarn were devastated by a night of storm and flood sweeping across the flat coastal plain of the North Wales coast between Rhyl and Colwyn Bay. Local libraries became centres organizing the response to the emergency, collating advice and information from Social Services, Environmental Health, insurers, Citizens Advice Bureaux and the Police, while the latter dealt with rescue operations. Between 200–500 enquiries per day were handled during the emergency and its aftermath period into June that year.

A concern for people frequently characterizes the work of public librarians who are invariably described as "helpful" by respondents to customer surveys. The development of services to ethnic groups has always featured within this concern and has ranged from provision to ex-patriate Poles at the end of the Second World War, through books in their native tongue for homesick Welsh-speakers trapped in Gloucester, to broader services under Section 11 funding. New arrangements for the latter services were negotiated during 1990 with funding of approved project bids to be available from April 1992. One group likely to benefit is the U.K. Chinese community for whom there have been noticeable attempts to improve services.

Despite the myriad of concerns being experienced in public library services—whether the worries of reduced funding or the increasing tendency to appoint non-librarians as managers of library services (see Cambridgeshire, East Sussex, Brent and Kent)—there remains much optimism about the place of libraries in society and the importance of their quietly efficient role in support of communities and democracy. The recent re-running of the local government reorganization saga must surely offer some opportunity for that rationalization of library services so near to the heart of the Minister for the Arts: current provision is an indefensible mish-mash of authorities that offers a patchwork of provision without benefit of national encouragement. If the Office of Arts and Libraries can persuade the Secretary of State for the Environment to arrive at unitary authorities sufficiently large in their population base and within geographically understood and locally accepted areas it could well have a base from which to encourage the re-invigoration of a public library service for the 21st century.

LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

Chief Executive: G. Cunningham, BA, BSc(Econ).

The Library Association was established in 1877 and incorporated by Royal Charter in 1898. It is the principal professional body for librarians and information specialists in the United Kingdom. It has approximately 25,000 members. The Association approves courses in the sixteen schools of librarianship and information science throughout the United Kingdom. Persons who have successfully completed such courses and who have undergone a period of supervised work in a library are styled 'Chartered Members of the Library Association' and may use the post-nominal letters 'ALA' or 'FLA' (Associate or Fellow of the Library Association). The Association issues statements and guidelines on a variety of subjects in the librarianship and information science field and actively co-operates with equivalent bodies in other countries, in particular through the International Federation of Library Associations.

The British Library is the national library for the United Kingdom. It was created in July 1973 under Act of Parliament by merging a number of national institutions. The British Library provides comprehensive reference, lending and bibliographic services on a national scale and supports research and development within the field of libraries and information. The Library's structure and nomenclature was revised in 1986 to allow the organisation to provide services more efficiently to its many users.

Humanities and Social Sciences provides comprehensive information and reference services based on its world-famous collections of some 12 million items, of monographs, manuscripts, maps, stamps, newspapers and recorded sound. Science Technology and Industry consists of the Document Supply Centre in West Yorkshire (which operates a rapid postal library interlending service of journals and photocopies) and the Science Reference and Information Service, based in London. The British Library creates the British National Bibliography and publishes bibliographic records of books and a wide range of other publications; it also provides an automated information service.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS

Quality House, Quality Court, Chancery Lane, London, WC2A 1HP (071-242 1198).

The Commission is an independent investigatory and advisory body first appointed by the Crown in 1869 to enquire and report on collections of papers of value for the study of history in private hands. It was given added responsibilities by its Royal Warrant of 1959 as a central co-ordinating body advising upon questions relating to the location, preservation and use of historical manuscripts and records, other than the Public Records.

It offers advice to local authorities and others on such matters as premises for their archive services, terms for the deposit of records and sources of grant aid towards the purchase, conservation and cataloguing of historical manuscripts. It carries out the statutory duties of the Master of the Rolls in respect of manorial and tithe documents and inspects record repositories for which his approval is sought. It advises the Secretary of State for the Environment on archive powers under the Local Government (Records) Act 1962.

The Commission publishes an Annual Review and an annual summary of Accessions to Repositories, and has published over 200 volumes of reports on particular collections. It maintains the National Register of Archives comprising over 34,000 unpublished reports which may be freely consulted in its search room.

Chairman: G. E. Aylmer, DPhil, FBA

Secretary: B. S. Smith, FSA.

Assistant Secretary: C. J. Kitching, PhD, FSA.

CLEAPSS School Science Service

Formed in 1963, the services offered by the Consortium fall into two categories:

- (a) An information and consultancy service in the field of science laboratory safety and science equipment is offered by the School Science Service to teachers, technicians and county officers. Through its bulletin and guides the Service encourages the wise purchase, careful maintenance and safe use of equipment. Several recent guides have been concerned with safety, e.g., fume cupboards, safe use of chemicals, etc and with primary science e.g. construction kits. The Service is able to provide information on certain aspects of microelectronics and information technology in school science. Other services are the monitoring of fume cupboard airspeeds and laboratory mercury vapour levels, the organisation of courses for teachers and technicians and the provision of risk assessments to enable schools to meet the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations. Open to all educational authorities in England, Wales and Northern Ireland; 103 authorities subscribe. Also to gms and independent schools.
- (b) A discount scheme which makes minimal demands on county supplies departments and gives teachers reasonable choice.

DIPLOMAS AND COURSES IN PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION PROVIDED BY BRITISH UNIVERSITIES AND POLYTECHNICS

UNIVERSITIESBirmingham—Institute of Local Government Studies

Advanced Management Development Programme—The primary purpose of the AMDP is to provide an opportunity for senior officers in local authorities to appraise and improve their capacity to manage the affairs of their authority in a way that is responsive to the wider environment. The Programme lasts one year and has three main phases. The preparatory phase is when those responsible in the Local Authority and the Institute discuss expectations, selection and development prospects. The second phase consists of a five weeks' residential period which is intended to enhance the knowledge and skill of the participant, challenge work approaches and performance and increase capacity to solve management problems. Problem solving is considered in its political, social and personal aspects. The third phase is in the local authority where the programme member will be expected to use the work situation to develop learning and appreciation of the management task. There will be visits from Inlogov tutors and follow-up seminars with other programme members.

Courses for Specific Local Authorities—the Institute provides post-experience courses specifically designed for their staff taking account of the particular needs of the Authority and the issues, problems and opportunities with which it is concerned.

Short Course and Seminars — this is a means by which new ideas and approaches may be disseminated, as well as providing a forum enabling local authorities to discuss and explore problems and solutions of current concern. Recent seminars have dealt with (among other things), Finance for non-financial managers, New Technology, Economic Development, Contracting-out, Managing Skills, Marketing, Service Level Agreements, Links with the Voluntary Sector, Quality and Equal Opportunities.

Special Activities — the Institute, through its teaching and research activities has built up a resource of knowledge and experience which is widely used by local government. As a result local authorities send individuals to the Institute for briefings; the Institute seconds members of staff to local authorities; arranges special seminars for professional bodies; acts as a convener for special study groups and undertakes advisory and consultancy work on issues commissioned by local authorities. Consultancy work has been increasing in recent years.

Working Groups. The Institute convenes each year a number of ad hoc or continuing working groups of local government officers concerned with research and intelligence, corporate planning, urban development corporations, district secretaries and financial management. It is willing to convene other such groups if so requested.

The Institute will be glad to discuss with any authority ways in which assistance may be offered during the coming year. Enquiries should be addressed to Ken Spencer, Director of Local Government Studies (021-414 4964).

The course aims to provide a broadly-based education relevant to housing management practice and with a substantial academic element. It is designed for people embarking on a career in housing and will provide the basis for working in a number of different settings and levels within the housing service.

The Diploma involves various different elements and methods of study. There are six taught courses: housing policy, administration and management, social structure and social policy, economics and housing finance, law, and development studies. In addition to these, there are a series of workshops in the first year and two separate placements in the second year with housing agencies, as well as nine residential block visits to SAUS.

Short courses and seminars. SAUS's short course programme reflects the priority areas of interest of the School as a whole. Courses, seminars and workshops explore emerging policy issues of current or future concern, relate to new legislation or administrative change required by central government, involve discussion and training in new skills or techniques and are aimed at personal and/or organisational development.

Specific topics dealt with more recently include 'greening' public services, developing collaborative framework in community care, partnerships between public and voluntary sectors, the problems of urban regeneration, study courses for councillors, developing the enabling role in housing, skills and training audits, quality, neighbourhood management, assertiveness training, and management and personal development for chief officers.

Management and Policy Consultancy. In addition to the programme of short courses and seminars held at Bristol, SAUS offers a consultancy service to public service organisations. The assistance available can take a variety of forms; purpose designed, in-house programmes which aim to develop the individual and the organisation (these include management development for the chief, senior and middle managers and more focused programmes on assertiveness, stress management and relating to the public); workshops for management teams (chief officer and departmental within local government and at district level in the NHS) which help examine and change ways of working, direction and leadership; developing the organisation in a particular area, for example, information technology, economic development, new approaches to financial management.

Contact: Colin Fudge or Sheila Collins, SAUS, Rodney Lodge, Grange Road, Bristol, BS8 4EA. Telephone: 0272 741117.

Research. Research accounts for over 50 per cent of SAUS activity and is planned around three main underlying themes: the formulation, implementation and evaluation of public policy; urban and regional change; innovation in governance, administration and management. These themes are addressed within the areas of urban policy, housing, employment and health and social care. Funding bodies have included central government departments, the Economic and Social Research Council, the Local Government Training Board, the Health Education Council and the European Foundation for the Improvement of Living and Working Conditions.

SAUS now houses the Decentralisation Research and Information Centre (DRIC) which carries out research and consultancy work, as well as providing information through its quarterly magazine and by running conferences and seminars.

BA(Hons) in Public Administration. The degree of BA in Public Administration was first approved in 1968 by the Council for National Academic Awards and is an Honours degree awarded following the successful completion of a four-year sandwich course.

The degree is seen as a response to the demand for modern subjects and vocational relevance in academic study to meet the need for an increasing number of graduates in public service.

The aim is to give a graduate who is preparing for an administrative career a knowledge of political, economic and social subjects so that their relevance to contemporary problems is observed.

Distinctive features of the course are the interrelation of subjects at each stage. Comparative studies are included to acquaint the student with systems and values of other countries. The final year enables students to specialise broadly in the areas of public or social administration.

A sandwich course is one in which training is an essential part of the course and this is arranged so that the equivalent of one year is spent on placement with a public authority.

Students may be Polytechnic based or authority based and all may apply to their Local Education Authority for a grant to cover the periods of full-time study and fees. The Polytechnic arranges the training in conjunction with participating authorities and where an authority sponsors a student it is usually expected he will do his training with that authority.

BA(Hons) Public Sector Legal Studies from 1988, the Polytechnic has offered a new degree course entitled BA(Hons) Public Sector Legal Studies.

The Course is part of an undergraduate Degree Programme in Public Administration and Public Sector Legal Studies, and will run alongside the well-established BA(Hons) Public Administration. The course in Public Sector Legal Studies is unique in this country, combining units of study in law with units in public sector administration. Many of the units of study are taken jointly by Public Administration and Public Sector Legal Studies students.

The aims of the course are to provide an education in law whereby students develop a thorough understanding of and training in legal principles and practice, relating in particular to public sector organisations and public utility industries; to provide, by means of the 48-week placement in Year 3 practical training and experience of legal work; and to develop an understanding of law and the legal system which considers law in its social and political context through a course of study comprising units both in law, and in political and social studies.

As with all undergraduate degrees in law, the course covers all the subjects needed for full exemption from the Common Professional Examination and the Diploma in Law, thus satisfying the exemption regulations of the Law Society and the council of Legal Education. This will enable students on graduation to read for either solicitors' or bar Final Examinations.

BA(Hons) Public Sector Management. From 1990 the School has offered a three year full-time degree in Management—the first of its kind—which is aimed more at mature entrants than at traditional school leavers.

A wide variety of subjects are offered which place the practice of management in a theoretical context and relate it closely to the aspirations and constraints of the Public Sector.

This is an innovative and forward thinking degree and attracts a high calibre of students. There is no 'sandwich' placement at the moment although it is possible that one may be introduced to attract younger entrants.

HND in Public Administration. This is a two year full-time course designed specifically for the Public Sector.

Entry requirements have some flexibility and they include National Certificates and combinations of A and O level GCEs.

The course is validated by the Business and Technician Education Council, and there is a possibility of transfer to the Degree in Public Administration within the Department if a student shows particular ability.

The aim of the course is to provide students with an understanding of the structure, environment and problems of the public sector with a view to preparing them for a career in the public services.

BA in Public Administration. This is a part-time course for three years duration two evenings per week which is intended to provide a part-time route to the degree for people, most of whom will have an HNC or HND in Public Administration and who will be either already employed in the public sector or hoping to obtain such employment.

HNC in Public Administration. This is a two year part-time course designed specifically for people working in the public sector.

The course is validated by the Business and Technician Education Council, and entry qualifications have some flexibility, ranging from National Certificates and combinations of A and O level GCEs, together with BTEC approved conversion courses.

There is the possibility of converting the HNC to an HND after a further year's part-time study.

The aim of the course is to provide students with an understanding of the structure, environment and problems of the public sector, and at the same time relate these factors to the student's particular working environment.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT FINANCE

A Review by Ian Ward—Assistant Secretary (Finance), ADC and Consultant on Local Government Finance

The 1991 Review started with the sentence "Local Government has experienced its most difficult period since the re-organisation in 1974". However if local authority finance staff thought they had seen the worst then they were sadly mistaken. No sooner had they come to terms with the implementation of the Community Charge than the Government announced its abolition and replacement with the Council Tax.

The start of the Community Charge (due on 1-4-90) itself proved extremely difficult. Primary and subordinate legislation did not appear until late in the implementation cycle resulting in delays in the development of the necessary computer and other systems. As the year progressed so other difficulties were encountered. The change from rates to Community Charge collection meant that all previous recovery procedures were rendered invalid. New case law and other legal procedures had to be "reinvented". Indeed as late as February 1991, a major change was brought about by the case Bradford Metropolitan Borough v Anderton. This changed the rule on definition of "sole or main residence" which lies at the very heart of the new system. However, despite all the problems, the great majority of local government finance departments have achieved very high collection rates for the new tax. The average at 31-3-91 being over 90% of the amount which was expected to be collected.

However, developments starting with the announced abolition of the Community Charge and many surprise announcements made from late March onwards have added to the difficulties for 1991/92. Examples were the announcement in the Budget of additional funding to reduce the headline Community Charge figure of all authorities by £140 and the improved transitional relief. These last minute changes have resulted in most authorities not being able to get their proper bills out until May or June. Many authorities had already issued bills on the old figures which had to be withdrawn, further adding to confusion.

Generally the delay will have an adverse impact on collection performance which the Government recognized and tried to compensate for by altering the payment schedule from the non-domestic rate pool. However, the long term effect on collection cannot yet be assessed.

The Government again made use of its capping powers in 1991/92. Fourteen authorities fell foul of tests of "high spending or excessive increases in spending" when compared to the Government's standard spending assessment. The Government has promised that the extra funds injected to reduce the headline charge by £140 will remain in 1991/92, however they are determined that this will not be used by authorities to fund extra spending. The exact mechanisms to achieve this remain to be seen, except for the abolition of the limit of £15m of spending, below which authorities could not be capped. This abolition will bring within potential capping many smaller district councils. It will, of necessity thereby, put pressure for greater accuracy in the SSAs for these authorities.

The Government has issued its consultation paper on the future of local government finance. Decisions may be expected in the Autumn of 1991, although the paper clearly indicates the end of the Community Charge. The Government's preferred replacement is the Council Tax based on the value of a property but with adjustment for single occupation and rebates for lower income groups.

Immediately however in considering the proposals there is further uncertainty for local government as to how the next General Election will impact. However, assuming the proposals go ahead there are three problem areas apparent from an initial appraisal. These are:

a) The timetable for introduction

Legislation should be in place by the summer of 1992 and introduction of the tax should be by April 1993. This timetable is impossibly short, indeed on the legislative side it is briefer than the introduction of the Community Charge. Given all the legal and practical problems which fed from that tight timescale, great concern must be felt that similar problems may flow from the timetable for the new tax.

b) Many features of a personal tax remain

The Council Tax clearly has a personal element based on claiming discount for single occupancy and for rebates for low incomes. These factors are likely to mean that many of the problems of Community Charge will remain. Examples are likely to include the problems of definition of residence, joint and several liability, etc. Fortunately rebates are to be up to the 100% level preventing authorities having to pursue very small amounts. It is a pity that this arrangement could not have been introduced for the last years of Community Charge.

c) Running two taxes

Over the next two years, local authorities will have to continue to collect the Community Charge (a tax that many of the public believe has already been abolished). Indeed the collection of arrears may continue until 1996 or beyond. At the same time as continuing to collect this difficult tax, authorities will be required to introduce the new Council Tax. The logistics and staffing requirements of this will place extreme burdens on authorities and their staff which in the event may become intolerable.

Alongside the Government's proposed change to the system of local government finance, there is also to be a re-organization of structure. A Commission (or Commissions) is to be established to review the country on a rolling programme basis. The expected result in most areas will be a move to unitary authority. Therefore all the problems indicated above will be aggravated by re-organization.

As well as these major changes, other Government initiatives will have implications in the area of local government finance. The probable extension of compulsory competitive tendering to administrative functions will, almost certainly, apply to many activities in Finance Departments.

Factors affecting authorities as a whole will also be significant in local government finance. Changes in this category include moves towards the enabling authority and the transfer of functions from local government (further education being the most recent example).

The conclusion to last year's Review used a cricketing metaphor but ended on an optimistic note of a batsman reaching his century. I am afraid that the events of the last 12 months suggest that a passage to such a satisfactory result now seems unlikely. Rather local government finance staff are akin to English batsmen awaiting the assault of the full battery of West Indian pace bowlers at their best with the new ball and a hostile pitch to bat upon. Not a prospect to savour.

PART I LOCAL GOVERNMENT FINANCE

CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL ON LOCAL GOVERNMENT FINANCE

The Council was formed in 1975 and provides for regular consultation between central and local government on major financial issues and in particular consultation on the revenue support grant. The Council complements other channels of communication between local government and individual government departments. It is chaired by the Secretary of State for the Environment and attended by Ministers from Government Departments responsible for local authority services and elected members of the local authority associations. The Council meets about twice a year.

Wales has separate revenue support grant arrangements and its own Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance but it continues to be represented on the Council as there are other local government issues of common interest to both countries.

In Scotland regular meetings take place between the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities; the business of these meetings includes the annual revenue support grant consultations. Northern Ireland has established a separate Consultative Committee to provide for regular consultations between central and local government on financial and other matters.

THE CHARTERED INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC FINANCE AND ACCOUNTANCY

3 Robert St., London, WC2N 6BH (071-895 8823; Fax: 071-895 8825).

Brief History

Founded 1885 as The Corporate Treasurers and Accountants Institute, subsequently changed to the Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants and more recently, by Supplemental Royal Charter, to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy.

Functions

The Institute's Royal Charter describes its principal objectives as:

(a) to advance the science of public finance and of accountancy and cognate subjects as applied to all or any of the duties imposed upon and functions undertaken by public service bodies;

(b) to promote public education therein;

(c) to promote and to publish the results of studies and research work therein and in related subjects.

The Institute is not directly concerned with the advancement of the personal interests of its members.

The CIPFA's activities and interests include the following:

(1) Professional Accountancy

The CIPFA is one of the six major professional accountancy bodies in the United Kingdom. Its members specialize in finance and accountancy for public service bodies, and membership as professional accountants is by examination.

Professional accountant members have the designation 'Institute of Public Finance Accountant' and are entitled to use the letters IPFA.

(2) Public Service

The CIPFA's interests and activities extend across the public sector, in public finance and accountancy in the health service, the regulated industries, and other public organisations as well as central and local government.

(3) Services and Facilities

The CIPFA in parallel with its activities as a professional accountancy body, maintains a wide range of services for public finance and accountancy:

(a) It provides a common ground for the discussion of public finance and accountancy, through conferences, seminars and meetings of Institute members and others interested in finance and accountancy in the public services.

(b) It publishes a wide range of statistics about the finance of public services. The range of these statistics is being extended, and data is available on disks.

(c) It operates a Financial Information Service which includes an up-to-date encyclopaedia of public finance administration. This is being extensively developed.

THE LOCAL AUTHORITIES' MUTUAL INVESTMENT TRUST

St Alphage House, 2 Fore Street, London, EC2Y 5AQ (071-588 1815; Telex: 8954509; Fax: 071-588 6291).

Chairman: H. Purcell, CBE.

Director: Viscount Churchill.

Secretary: D. Fitton, FCA.

Advisory Panel: J. A. Dick, CA; C. J. Kirman; H. J. Pickett, FRICS.

The Local Authorities' Mutual Investment Trust is a company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1948, limited by guarantee and not having a share capital. It is established under Section 11 of the Trustee Investments Act 1961, by the Associations of local authorities in England and Wales and in Scotland to provide local authorities in the United Kingdom with investment management and advisory services and with facilities for collective investment.

The Trust, a non-profit making body, is wholly controlled by persons appointed by the Associations. Its management is supervised by a Council of these members assisted by Investment Advisors well known for their investment experience. The day-to-day management of the investments is the responsibility of a Director appointed by the Council.

Common Investment Funds

The Trust manages two common investment funds administered on unit trust lines which are available to all local authorities subject only to the powers of investment attaching to the particular monies being invested and are primarily used for superannuation funds.

The Local Authorities' Property Fund with a capital of approximately £128 million at March 1991 is invested in freehold and long leasehold commercial and industrial property in the United Kingdom. It aims to provide professional management of property with the object of increasing the real value of participants' capital and income.

The Equity Fund, with objectives similar to those of the Property Fund and with a capital of approximately £11 million at March 1991, is primarily invested in UK ordinary shares and overseas stocks.

The funds are valued at the end of each month. The basic values of units are published in the Financial Times and The Times. Income is distributed half-yearly to unit-holders in April and October. The funds are not liable to Capital Gains Tax and participating authorities can recover United Kingdom Income Tax deducted from or credited against income.

Associated Investment Management and Advisory Service

Through its associated company, Church, Charity and Local Authority Fund Managers Limited, an investment management and/or advisory service is provided for individual authorities' superannuation fund portfolios. This comprehensive service provides professional management of equities and fixed interest stocks in the United Kingdom and overseas and of United Kingdom property. Emphasis is placed on total return, capital and income combined. Regular investment management reports and valuations are provided according to individual requirements.

CCLA as a Member of IMRO (Investment Management Regulatory Organisation) has authorisation under the Financial Services Act 1986.

RATING AND VALUATION

THE INSTITUTE OF REVENUES, RATING AND VALUATION

41 Doughty St., London, WC1N 2LF (071-831 3505; Fax. 071-831 2048).

The Institute seeks to improve the technical knowledge and professional status of persons engaged in rating, revenues collection, valuation and allied spheres of interest. It promotes the study of the principles and practice of the law relevant to these professional activities. It advises members, government departments, local authorities, committees of enquiry and similar bodies on any matter coming within the scope of such activities.

The Institute, which was founded in 1882 and relaunched in 1990, has members drawn from those employed both in the public service and in private practice. They perform duties relating to rating, revenues collection, valuation and allied spheres of interest in the service of government departments, local authorities, professional firms of surveyors and valuers, the local valuation and community charge tribunals, rent officer services, public corporations, industrial and commercial companies as well as members of the legal profession and teaching staffs in the institutions of higher education. The knowledge and experience acquired by members ensures an informed and comprehensive corpus of thought on all matters coming within the Institute's professional field.

The Institute is fully recognised for promotion and appointment purposes in local government. Qualified valuer members with the appropriate experience are recognised so far as insurance valuations, current cost accounting and leasehold reform valuations are concerned.

The Institute organises conferences and professional meetings; it publishes textbooks, statistical returns, commentaries on current legislation as well as a monthly journal; it conducts professional examinations and it undertakes research projects.

LANDS TRIBUNAL

48/49 Chancery La., London, WC2A 1JR (071-936 7200).

President: V. G. Wellings, QC.

Registrar: C. A. McMullan.

All communications should be addressed to the Registrar.

The Lands Tribunal, which is an independent judicial body, was constituted by the Lands Tribunal Act 1949 for the purpose of determining a wide range of questions relating to valuation of land, compensation for the compulsory acquisition of land, rating appeals from Valuation and Community Charge Tribunals (formerly local valuation courts) and the discharge or modification of restrictive covenants. The Act also empowers the Tribunal to accept the function of arbitration under references by consent.

Since 1949 the jurisdiction has been extended by numerous public and private Acts of Parliament and by Orders in Council made under the Lands Tribunal Act 1949. The extended powers include the determination of disputes as to the valuation of land for taxation, and hearing appeals against decisions of leasehold valuation tribunals.

The Tribunal consists of a legally qualified President and other members appointed by the Lord Chancellor, who may be either lawyers or persons with experience in the valuation of land. The Tribunal hears cases not only in London but at convenient centres throughout England and Wales. Any person dissatisfied with the decision of the Tribunal on a point of law may require it to state a case for the decision of the Court of Appeal.

The Tribunal has power to award costs in any proceedings before it.

LANDS TRIBUNAL FOR SCOTLAND

1 Grosvenor Crescent, Edinburgh, EH12 5ER (031-225 7996)

The Lands Tribunal for Scotland, which is an independent judicial body, was constituted in 1970 by Order of the Secretary of State for Scotland under the Lands Tribunal Act 1949 for the purpose of determining a wide range of questions relating to valuation of land, compensation for the compulsory acquisition of land, allocation of Feu Duties, the discharge or variation of restrictive land obligations and tenants' rights legislation. A REVIEW OF THE FIRE SERVICE

by K. E. Rose, General Manager of the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers' Association

The world of the Fire Service continues to be lively. A DoE Consultation Paper on Local Government Structure in England issued in April 1991 suggested significant changes in the organisation of local authorities. In particular the introduction of unitary authorities could substantially increase the number of fire authorities unless more joint boards are to be created. At the time of writing this review, the responses to the Consultation Paper are due to be returned. My own Association has said it would not welcome more and therefore smaller brigades on grounds of operational efficiency and cost.

The Government's proposals for financing local government through the new council tax would leave local authorities to raise only about 15% of the expenditure of local services, including the Fire Service. This low figure would not augur well for satisfactory local control.

As in other parts of the local government sector the search for efficiency is increasingly present. Prompted by the House of Commons Select Committee for Home Affairs a project to introduce a uniform system of output measures and performance indicators (OMPIS) has been planned during 1990/91. It involves the Home Office and a pilot group of seven brigades. OMPIS is due to be introduced for the pilot authorities during 1991/92 and generally the following year.

Computer technology has a vital part to play in Fire Service mobilising and communications systems. This is because even a small saving in time in responding to a fire call can avoid personal injury or loss of life as well as significant damage to property. These systems are also capable of producing valuable management information as well as operational statistics. Discussion at national level is trying to identify a strategy for the way forward bearing in mind a range of possible options and a fairly long lead time to implementation.

My Association took the initiative in 1988 by introducing the FINDS computer network system which links Brigades headquarters, Home Office, Scottish Office, Fire Service College and others for electronic mail and database applications. This system is being substantially updated during 1991 and the service to subscribers will be much improved.

In the area of fire safety a review of building regulations has been underway which among other changes is redefining the role of fire and building control authorities. The Fire Service will be anxious to see that the new arrangements work as well as is intended.

There is an increasing proportion of dwellings with smoke alarms fitted and a growing body of opinion that all homes should have them installed. A Private Members Bill which would have made this compulsory failed to obtain the necessary support in the House of Commons early in 1991. However a successor Bill introduced to the House soon afterwards, which was related only to new homes, appears currently to have a good chance of success.

The use of sprinklers in commercial premises has proved to be an important aid to limiting fire damage. Encouraged by some progress in providing them in domestic premises in North America, manufacturers and others are drawing attention to their potential here.

Following the few but still too many disasters in recent years at football grounds those in the Fire Service will be glad to welcome the setting up of the Football Licensing Authority and the Football Stadia Advisory Design Council to help bring about safer and improved standards of provision for the future.

Whilst the need for civil defence in time of war seems to be receding, experience has shown there is an increased need for planning for civil emergencies. The Fire Service has played a full part in the consultative machinery of Government and all the emergency services and a manual of emergency fire service procedures has been issued to establish common guidelines.

The progressive training of fire personnel throughout their careers is a very important feature of the Service. The role of the national Fire Service College at Moreton-in-Marsh has been dominant in this respect. The College had been fully funded by HM Government until 1991/92 when a move was made towards charging users of courses. This was followed soon afterwards by a Government decision to make the status of the College that of a Government Agency in 1992, in accordance with the Next Steps programme. This means that the College will be given an operational and financial framework, plus targets, and a greater degree of freedom of management. It is hoped on all sides that the traditionally close relationship between the College and the Fire Service will survive these changes.

There are important international aspects of the Fire Service which are of current interest. For some time there has been a large professional input into the determination of standards for equipment, uniforms, appliances and for the fire safety of buildings, fittings and furnishings. This work, which has been done alongside commercial, industrial and other interests, has been under the auspices of the British Standards Institution but is now increasingly directed towards the European Community for 1992 and beyond.

For some time there has also been much concern in fire service circles about the need to retain emergency action codes on vehicles carrying hazardous loads on British roads. To date there has been much discussion but as yet no agreement on the way forward in a European context.

On some occasions, there is a call for British fire personnel to assist with rescue and other duties in connection with disasters or crises elsewhere in the world. In 1991 a nationally-coordinated scheme has been agreed which will call upon the resources of those fire authorities willing to participate. Almost immediately it was established, the scheme was used to send approximately one hundred firefighters to Iraq in three teams to assist the resettlement of Kurdish refugees. The principal parties to the scheme are CACFOA, London as the coordinating brigade, Home Office and the Overseas Development Administration which meets the costs.

At international level there is also cooperation through a body known as CTIF which has member countries from all over the world. It provides for the sharing of information and experience and also arranges competitions. The British contribution is made through the Federation of British Fire Organisations which is supported by Government, several fire authorities, professional and trade associations. There is world-wide cooperation in organising international conferences whilst the annual FIRE conferences held in the United Kingdom always attract a good number of overseas delegates.

(b) to enable members to meet and to correspond and to facilitate the interchange of ideas respecting improvements in the various branches of the said science and the publication and communication of information on such subjects.

The Journal, published quarterly, containing papers on subjects connected with Fire Engineering, is published and sent without charge to all members and students.

The current membership is approximately 10,000.

Training is also provided for overseas fire brigades, and industry and commerce. The courses are designed to provide a progressive and integrated scheme of training to ensure that when men are promoted from the basic rank of fireman, they are trained as officers in the skills of leadership and command. Specialist training covering all aspects of fire service activity is also provided at the College. The College has 76 directing, 58 administrative and 65 industrial staff. The work of the directing staff—the majority of whom are fire officers on secondment from their parent brigades—is divided between five Study Groups: Operations; Command; Fire Prevention; Supervisory Studies and General Education; Science and Engineering.

“WHAT IF?”

A TRUCK CARRYING RADIOACTIVE WASTE HAD A HEAD ON COLLISION WITH A PETROL TANKER

Suppose this lorry had been carrying a container of intermediate-level radioactive waste to a rail depot.

It was involved in a head on collision with a petrol tanker carrying thousands of gallons of fuel.

The petrol caught fire, engulfing the container in flames before the fire was finally extinguished.

The lorries certainly wouldn't be much use after the inferno, but remarkably the container would still be doing its job; protecting people from the radioactive waste.

This is because it uses the multi-barrier method of containment, combining three different layers of protection, to ensure maximum safety. The waste is immobilised in solid concrete. It is then sealed inside 500 litre stainless steel drums, before four of the drums are packed together in what is called a stillage, designed to prevent the drums knocking together during transport.

Finally the drums are sealed inside a solid steel body up to 12 inches thick, capable of withstanding a severe fire for at least 30 minutes.

Admittedly the scenario above is extremely unlikely ever to happen, but it's just one more example of the meticulous research and planning that Nirex undertake to ensure the safety of every man, woman and child.

ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH

A Review by the Institution of Environmental Health Officers

The role of environmental health in the protection of human health and the promotion of better health is now better understood and appreciated than ever before. Today's environmental health officer has evolved from what used to be called the "inspector of nuisances". One hundred years ago, this involved dealing with problems arising from poor drainage, verminous premises and unfit food. Now the EHO is working in tandem with many other professions to bring about the improvement and protection of the environment and to achieve improvements in the health and safety of the community. The preservation of the global environment is inseparable from the maintenance of a healthy local community and thus the importance of the intersectoral approach, one which involves a close alliance between those working in the field of conservation and regeneration and those working in public health, has become essential.

This was one aspect highlighted at the end of 1989 by the Government in its White Paper "This Common Inheritance". Last year the Institution published its own vision statement, which strongly emphasized the links between lifestyle and the social, living and working environment. "The reduction of all forms of pollution, the provision of good quality housing, the maintenance of a safe environment at work, the control of communicable disease and the safeguarding of food are all essential to good health". The Institution's view is that the close cooperation needed to achieve these targets can, and should only, be achieved within an effective system of unitary local authorities. It made this recommendation to the Government last year, when yet another local government review was announced. The Institution once again stressed the vital and integral part of environmental health in local government, highlighting the benefits of a holistic approach to delivery of services.

Coordination was a key theme in the government's strategy for the health of the nation published last year which emphasized the importance and diverse nature of the contribution of many public authorities in the prevention of illness and the promotion of health.

The environmental health profession has recently developed a much more systematic approach to the quality of its service delivery to the community. It has been recognized that quality assurance can be equally well applied to delivering a high standard of customer care as it can to manufacturing a high quality product. As resources have become scarcer, the quality of service delivery in environmental health has increasingly come under scrutiny both within and without the profession. During the course of last year, the Audit Commission initiated a full scale review into the efficiency and effectiveness of local authority environmental health departments.

A great deal of pressure has been placed on the profession by the flood of new legislation which had been enacted in previous years and which has to be put into practice. New laws governing food safety came into force at the beginning of last year, swiftly followed by numerous Codes of Practice which had been prepared by an Implementation Advisory Committee, on which the Institution was represented. The Institution has worked closely with the Government and with industry to ensure uniformity of inspection and enforcement of the new food safety laws. The new Act received wholehearted support for these long overdue developments though only time will tell whether the strengthening of the law will bring about a reduction in the number of food poisoning cases. One of the major strengths of the Act is its ability to be supplemented by additional Regulations. The Institution has strongly emphasized its opinion to Government that these enabling powers should be used to ensure that the new provisions laid down in the Act are supplemented by detailed Regulations designed to protect the public.

Much of the new legislation dealing with food safety has been influenced by the European Community. The Institution has been involved in discussions regarding implementation, at national level, of Directives relating to food hygiene, fish products, bivalve molluscs, and meat. Health and safety legislation in the United Kingdom is also being affected by the work of the European Community. This year is European Year of Health and Safety. The remit of local authorities to enforce health and safety has immeasurably broadened over the last year in the light of the activities of the European Community's work in this field. Most specifically the emergence of the Social Charter, accompanied by many relevant Directives, has resulted in much greater weight being placed on bringing about improvements in the workplace as well as the safety and welfare of people in their place of work.

Environmental policy in this country is also increasingly driven by European Community policy. Last year saw the implementation of the Environmental Protection Act, bringing the United Kingdom into line with other European countries in the field of air quality and waste disposal. Intersectoral collaboration is also taking place between professionals involved in environmental protection, as can be seen in the growing awareness of the benefits of looking at the effect of a new construction on the environment prior to it being built. Planners, architects, surveyors work alongside EHOs to conduct environmental impact assessments of new premises. This spirit of cooperation between relevant professionals is reflected in a European context. Recently a European Federation of Environmental professionals was established, of which the Institution is a leading member. This provides a regular forum in which effective implementation of Directives within Member States is discussed. This forum could prove invaluable as it is likely that, as from this year Member States will find it increasingly difficult to implement their own environmental policies unless they fit generally into the EC Framework.

Noise complaints received by local authorities have increased threefold since the Control of Pollution Act was introduced in 1976 to deal with noise problems. Government recognition of the severity of the problems resulted in a revision of the law in the Environmental Protection Act which required local authorities to take such steps as are reasonably practicable to investigate noise complaints. The new duties inevitably have significant resource implications for local authorities but nevertheless the Institution was pleased that the extent of the problems had finally been recognized. Action was also taken to deal with specific types of noise problems such as motorcycle and entertainment noise, while aircraft and railway noise were earmarked as problem areas during the course of last year.

Nearly all of the professions based in local authorities have a role to play in the development of energy efficiency policies. This has become a major priority and EHOs are ideally placed to coordinate strategies relating to energy efficiency. Energy efficiency combines the two concerns which are central to the existence of the EHO—protection of the environment and welfare of the people who live in it. The main impact of activity will clearly focus on the built environment, again placing an emphasis on the need to collaborate with architects, surveyors, engineers and housing managers.

Previous years have seen a period in intense activity in the field of private sector housing as local authorities have been involved in the planning and implementation of the wholesale changes in legislation brought about by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Last year, however, was a year of consolidation and a return to normality. The new renovation grant system has been a greater administrative burden than its predecessor but this was to be expected. The means-testing of grant applicants has proved to be less problematic than some had first feared but nevertheless changes were perceived to be required and the Department of the Environment with the assistance of the local authorities associations undertook a review of the grants system and related matters such as the input of the capital finance system on private sector housing activity during the summer.

The capital finance system is generally viewed as the greatest obstacle to progress in improving private sector housing conditions in England and few authorities had the confidence to promote the availability of renovation grants for fear of overspending. Similar qualms were felt by many authorities in the examination of their future urban renewal programmes delivered through declaration of renewal areas. The large scale impact expected of this approach in a ten year period implies for each area a capital expenditure of many millions of pounds. In the present financial climate in local government few authorities were bold enough to commit to such an undertaking.

Group Repair which was intended to provide the legislative tool to replace enveloping was found to be a rather unwieldy instrument of policy by many local authorities and, on the instigation of the IEHO, was reviewed by the Department of the Environment.

International public health issues were at the forefront of debate of the Institution's annual congress last year and speakers from all over the world congregated for an exchange of information and ideas on issues related to the environment and public health. Global issues which are relevant to environmental health will continue to occupy the Institution at national level and the EHO at local level. There remain outstanding issues to tackle as we approach the millenium. Transport for example continues to pose growing problems for the environment with little sign of any diminution of traffic volume. However, the bulk of the work of the environmental health professional will rest as always on securing improvements to the health and lifestyle of the local community and the protection of the environment in which it lives.

INSTITUTION OF ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH OFFICERS

Chadwick Hse., 48 Rushworth St., London, SE1 0QT (071-928 6006).

The Institution was founded in 1883, in 1891 was registered as an incorporated company and in 1984 was incorporated by Royal Charter. The motto of the Institution is Amicus humani generis (friend of the human race).

The Institution is a professional and educational body, dedicated to the promotion of environmental health. It is particularly concerned in encouraging the highest possible standards both in the training and the work of environmental health officers. The Institution helps members with advice and the latest technical information.

There are over 7,500 members, most of whom work for local authorities in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. There are some members overseas and a growing number of environmental health officers are employed by commercial and industrial firms.

The Institution regulates the training of environmental health officers. The qualification is the Diploma in Environmental Health or a Degree which carries exemption from the Diploma examination. The Institution is responsible for the administration of the Registration Board.

The Society of Environmental Health Officers is a limited Company whose organisation and administration is closely tied in with that of the Institution both at local and national level. It was established in 1977 and conducts all matters relating to the service conditions of environmental health officers. The Society is represented on the Joint Consultative Committee of NALGO.

SEAPORT AND AIRPORT HEALTH AUTHORITIES IN ENGLAND AND WALES

Seaports

Port Health Authorities are constituted with the primary objective of preventing the international dissemination of dangerous epidemic, contagious and infectious diseases, without creating unnecessary interference to world traffic. On the premise that preventing epidemic would reduce the local expense of providing for paupers, the General Board of Health had in 1849 started to issue provisional orders assigning to the Poor Law Guardians at endangered ports, powers to deal with shipping arrivals suspected of having cholera on board. Subsequently the Sanitary Act 1866, section 32 made ships subject to the jurisdiction of the Nuisance Authority for the district to which they were brought. As ports generally extend over the area of more than one riparian authority, the Public Health Act 1872, section 20 empowered the Local Government Board to permanently constitute in any district, one port sanitary authority with jurisdiction over the port as established for the purposes of the laws relating to the Customs of the United Kingdom. This was a far more satisfactory arrangement for the health control of shipping than was provided by the 1825 Quarantine Act, which had been administered by the Commissioners of Customs under the direction of the Privy Council, until their functions were transferred to the Local Government Board by the Public Health Act 1896. The 1872 Act designated the Corporation of London the health authority for the port of London and provided for the assignment of powers of the Sanitary Acts to the port authorities. These statutory powers were re-enacted in 1875 and in the Public Health Act 1936, which measure changed the style from Sanitary Authorities to Port Health Authorities. The provisions of the 1936 Act relating to port health were subsequently incorporated in the Public Health (Control of Disease) Act 1984.

The Local Government Act 1972 provided that where a joint board was constituted as the Port Health Authority, it continued to exist if the port health district extended over the areas of two or more of the new local authorities. Otherwise unless a district council was designated the port health authority, the new district council whose area comprises or abuts on the greater part of the port became the port health authority for that district. Apart from the Port of London, which was dealt with in the London Government Act 1963, section 41, the authorities constituted port health authorities by Order are cited in the port health authorities orders for England and Wales, Statutory Instruments numbers 218 and 219 (1974). As part of the 1974 re-organisation the medical staff employed in port health were transferred to the National Health Service, but it was made the responsibility of the Secretary of State to provide medical services to port health authorities in order to enable them to discharge their functions relating to public health, National Health Service Re-organisation Act 1973, section 11.

The area of jurisdiction of a port health authority is specified in the constituting Order. The port health district can comprise either the whole or part of a customs port. Additionally jurisdiction is normally given to a port health authority over such part of the district of the riparian authority constituting the whole of any wharf, the area within the dock gates and the buildings thereof respectively. So far as the port of London is concerned the area is specified in the London Government Act 1963 and extended by the City of London (Various Powers) Act 1965, and extends along the Thames from Teddington Lock to the seaward limit which is drawn from Foulness Point on the Essex side to Gun Fleet Old Lighthouse then south to a position 3 miles north of Margate and thence west to Warden Point on the Kentish side. A port health authority may have assigned to them in the constituting Order any of the powers of a local authority under the Public Health Acts, 1936–69, Clean Air Acts 1956–68, Slaughterhouse Act 1974, Control of Pollution Act 1974 or in relation to imported animals etc. Animals Health Act 1981. For the purposes of the Prevention of Damage by Pests Act, 1949, section 1 provides that the local authority for any port health district, shall be the Port Health Authority. The Food Safety Act 1990 assigns the functions of a "food authority" to a port health authority, and for the purpose of Parts I and III the Environmental Protection Act 1990 provides that they shall exercise the functions of a local authority within the port health district. Apart from these statutory provisions, the chief duties of a port health authority arise from the Public Health (Ships) Regulations 1979, made by the Secretary of State for Social Services under section 13 of the Public Health (Control of Disease) Act 1984 which inter alia contains provisions for implementing the government's obligations under the International Health Regulations of the World Health Organisation. The Public Health (Infectious Diseases) Regulations 1968, as amended apply to the notification and authorise certain measures for preventing the spread of disease in port health districts.

Port Health Officers may be appointed as authorised officers under the Imported Food Regulations 1984 for the examination of foods imported for human consumption and for the detention of any foods which appear to them to be unsound, unwholesome or unfit for human consumption, or which in the case of meat, meat products or poultry meat have come from sources not approved for public use. They also carry out various other health and hygiene controls, e.g. under the Food Hygiene (Docks, Carriers, etc.) Regulations 1960, Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970 and the Meat (Staining & Sterilization) Regulations 1982. Responsibility has also been assigned to port health authorities for enforcing the provisions of the Materials and Articles in Contact with Food Regulations 1978, and the Labelling of Food Regulations 1984. Milk, milk drinks and cream are subject to the Imported Milk Regulations 1983, imports are only permitted from the European Community provided they comply with the specified Public Health Regulations.

From 1st April 1974 expenditure on port health services by local authorities (as defined in section 10 of the Local Government Act 1974) is relevant expenditure for Rate Support Grant purposes. Authorities which are not so defined as local authorities may precept neighbouring local authorities in order to meet their costs in carrying out port health functions.

Airports

Section 21 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 (which replaces a similar provision which appeared previously in Air Navigation Orders) in effect requires aircraft coming to the United Kingdom first to alight at a Customs airport. At such an airport there is the same need for health control as at a seaport, but the speed of air travel necessitates even greater vigilance. All the principal civilian airports in this country have been designated Customs airports, and, broadly, they may be divided into three categories: (a) National airports—i.e., airports vested in or under the control of the Department of Trade or the British Airports Authority (set up by the Airports Authority Act 1965); (b) municipal airports; and (c) privately owned airports.

NOTE: Airports at which Customs facilities are provided, or are available, for specified services at certain periods only, are not treated as Customs airports.

The powers, etc., for applying health control at airports are contained in regulations made by the Secretary of State for Social Services. Regulations on this subject were first made in 1938, under Section 143 of the Public Health Act 1936 (like the Public Health (Ships) Regulations). Subsequently, additional powers were given by the Civil Aviation Act 1946 (now contained in the Civil Aviation Act 1971) to apply the Regulations to National airports (which are Crown property) and the current regulations—the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations 1979—were made under the Acts of 1936 and 1971.

The Authorities responsible for executing and enforcing the Regulations at airports (styled "responsible authorities") vary with the category of the airport.

- (a) At National airports, the Secretary of State for Social Services is primarily the responsible authority but he has power to delegate his functions to local authorities (including County Councils) or to the British Airports Authority at airports under its control. In every case the Secretary of State has delegated his functions to a local authority which then becomes the responsible authority. The responsible authority at a National airport need not be the local authority for the district in which the airport is situated and, in practice, the delegation varies with circumstances of the particular airport.
- (b) At a municipal airport, the maintaining local authority are usually the responsible authority, notwithstanding that the airport may be outside their district.
- (c) At a privately owned airport, the responsible authority or port health authority are the local authority for the district in which the airport is situated.

A responsible authority as such, is concerned only with the application of the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations. Other matters, such as the enforcement of the Imported Food Regulations, sanitary services at the airport, etc., are the general concern of the local authority for a district; at a National airport vested in or under the control of the Department of Trade (Civil Aviation Dept.) (into which, being Crown property, the local authority have no right of entry) arrangements for these matters are made between the controlling Department and the local authority.

The general scope of the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations is similar to that of the Public Health (Ships) Regulations, the powers of the Airport Medical Officer being broadly the same; but additional precautions are embodied in their application as (unlike voyage by ships from the usual infected areas) the time taken to come from those areas by air can be less than the incubation period of the more dangerous infectious diseases.

The expenditure of responsible authorities in operating the health control at National airports is wholly reimbursed by the Exchequer.

Certain Royal Air Force airfields and Royal Naval Air stations have been designated Customs airports for the first landing of Service aircraft entering the United Kingdom. The Service medical authorities apply health control to any aircraft (Service or civilian) alighting at one of these airports. The control is, broadly, on the same lines as that operated at civilian airports. The Commander of a Service aircraft landing at a civilian airport is expected to comply and to ensure compliance with the civilian control.

ASSOCIATION OF PORT HEALTH AUTHORITIES

Dutton House, 46 Church St., Runcorn, Cheshire, WA7 1LL (0928 580440).

Originally constituted as the Association of Port Sanitary Authorities following a meeting of representatives of eight authorities in 1898, the name was subsequently changed to the Association of Port Health Authorities. Membership of the Association is open to any port health authority having responsibility for enforcement of public health ships regulations, public health aircraft regulations or imported food regulations.

The main objectives of the Association are to co-ordinate and promote an efficient port health service to prevent the importation of dangerous infections and epidemic disease and to maintain acceptable standards of environmental health in port health districts. And to ensure that imported food is fit for human consumption, produced in hygiene conditions and properly labelled.

Representations are made to Government on behalf of member authorities; the policy of the Association is formulated through a Council serviced by Committees on Policy and Finance, Imported Food and Environmental Health and Hygiene. Port Health is a national service provided in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland by local authorities and boards. To enable them to effectively protect the public health, an information service is provided by the Association to disseminate details of problems that have been identified either locally or internationally.

Secretary: Peter Rotheram.

NATIONAL HEALTH

A Review by Philip Hunt, Director, The National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts (NAHAT)

The most radical changes since the NHS was formed in 1948 were implemented during NAHAT's first year. Our members have had to become accustomed to the new separation of purchasing and providing responsibility which has meant a considerable change in culture and attitude. In responding to these changes on behalf of its members NAHAT has also gone through a period of dramatic change. In June 1990 in Scarborough the National Association of Health Authorities and the Society of Family Practitioner Committees voted to join together on an equal basis to form one organization which would represent the interests of family health services authorities, health authorities and NHS Trusts. Fortunately we have emerged a stronger and more flexible organization. We have welcomed many of the new NHS trusts as members and for the first time we have a Scottish Health Board in membership. Increasingly we are being consulted by outside organizations, and importantly, House of Commons Committees have sought our views. That the new Health Committee chose NAHAT to give evidence to its first hearing demonstrates the Association's credibility.

During the past twelve months one of our most important priorities, has been to provide information and support to NHS authorities and trusts as they prepare to implement the reforms introduced by the NHS and Community Care Act 1990. NAHAT briefings, seminars and conferences have sought at every stage to keep members organizations well informed and to foster debate and discussion, particularly in the development of contracting.

The Association has also undertaken considerable policy work. It has made clear to Ministers and the Department of Health, the considerable resource needs of the service in implementing the changes and providing the quality and range of care required.

As our financial surveys have revealed, NHS authorities have faced a tough year and have had to make a number of difficult decisions in order to balance their books. The indications are, however, that developments have been possible and the number of patients treated has, at the very least, been maintained.

As well as keeping a watchful eye on NHS funding, NAHAT has worked closely with a number of other agencies to disseminate ideas and information on key health issues, particularly in the fields of care in the community, accident prevention, the care of children and the planning and provision of services to individuals from black and minority ethnic communities. NAHAT, I believe, has an important role to play in ensuring that all parts of the NHS are made aware of current good practice and are given practical advice and recommendations on how best to replicate it.

The increasingly close working of district health authorities and family health services authorities, which has been promoted and encouraged in the new NHS, show how right it was for NAHA and the Society of FPCs to merge their interests. Inevitably, therefore, the Association has focused on primary health care issues, including the implementation of the new GP and dental contracts, and their implications for both FHSAs and DHAs.

NAHAT has also sought over the year to provide support to the first wave of NHS trusts approved by the Department of Health and we look forward to working with trusts in the years ahead.

All our member NHS authorities have been faced with a most demanding period of change. They have had to get to grips with the complexities of contracting for healthcare; some as providers and some as purchasers. They have set into place a tremendous infrastructure to allow "Working for Patients" to work.

Managed Competition

The results of a survey of district general manager's attitudes to the reforms introduced by the NHS and Community Care Act 1990, conducted under the auspices of NAHAT, revealed that there is considerable support amongst managers for the thrust of the changes and particularly the purchaser providers split.

The three year project, "Monitoring Managed Competition" is sponsored by the King's Fund as part of its ongoing research into the NHS reforms.

As part of the project's work, a national survey of district general managers in England and Wales was carried out between 21 September and 3 November 1990, to which 72% responded. It focused partly on the new role for DGMs as the NHS was remodelled into separate "purchasing" functions, and partly on preparations for implementing the NHS reforms on 1 April this year.

The survey revealed that the vast majority of NHS managers (85%) in responding to a survey of attitudes to the NHS and Community Care Act 1990 conducted last Autumn said that they approved the reforms. And an even higher percentage (88%) considered that the Act would make the NHS more businesslike in its approach which was thought to be beneficial to the service.

The Act was not seen as a universal panacea by district general managers. Eighty-six per cent expressed the view that "underfunding" was a "fundamental problem in the NHS". Furthermore, 79% considered that the Act "will not solve the fundamental problem of underfunding in the NHS". However DGMs were almost evenly split on the effect of the reforms on waiting lists.

A major issue was found to be the pace of change. Just over three quarters (77%) of DGMs thought the changes were being pushed through too fast. But 23% thought that the timetable would give them enough time to achieve implementation. Overwhelmingly 84% reported that the pace of change was having a stressful effect in their districts. However, 58% agreed that management were "generally confident about their futures in the district". Clearly DGMs had two major concerns: first the pace of change, and secondly, the issue of funding.

Whilst the NHS has worked very hard to overcome timetable problems to ensure that the changes were able to start on 1 April, it is clear that additional funding will be needed over the next few years to help us meet the growing demands on our services in the light of health assessments by DHAs.

Care in the Community

The invitation extended to NAHAT by the newly established House of Commons Health Committee to give evidence to its first formal hearing in February 1991 was a reflection of the strength and credibility of our organization. Later when we received an invitation from the House of Commons Social Security Committee to give evidence on financing private and residential nursing home fees we were able to voice some of the concerns that we felt were important for the future viability of care in the community policies.

NAHAT explained to the Committee that nursing home places for people on low incomes, particularly the frail elderly, who were assessed as needing continuing nursing care might be unavailable due to the lack of a clear national policy about the responsibility for funding and provision of such care. Indeed we had already written to William Waldegrave, Secretary of State for Health urging him to get together with the Secretary of State for Social Security to issue a joint policy statement to clarify the issue.

In our evidence to the Committee we welcomed the objectives of shared assessment of patients' needs between health and local authorities and of care management but pointed out that there was a fundamental issue on which national policy was required.

The Association had substantial evidence that some major local authorities were working on the basis that health authorities would have the responsibility for meeting the costs of patients in nursing homes requiring continuing care on grounds of ill health.

Local Authorities had based this view on a paragraph in the government's White Paper "Caring for People" on which the NHS and Community Care Act 1990 was based. However, according to NAHAT, a contrary position, that the entire cost of nursing home fees would fall to be met by local authorities was indicated in the same White Paper. And we pointed out that unless there was a national ground rule about this issue the likely result in many parts of the country would be a failure of services to provide the requisite level of care. The failure of continuing access to nursing home beds for those patients assessed as needing that kind of care would lead to them being kept in hospital and, against the background over a number of years of a reduction in the number of continuing care beds in the NHS, would quickly lead to a blocking of hospital facilities.

We believe that health authorities will not, on present plans, be funded for the responsibilities envisaged by local authorities and in these circumstances there will be a potential financial and service gap in the otherwise theoretically seamless provision of care.

To put the problem into some perspective one can quote the latest DH statistics which showed that there were 94,465 beds in 3288 nursing homes in England. Of these 73,601 were designated for elderly people. There has also been substantial further growth since these figures were produced by the DH (March 1989).

Our evidence reveals that few homes had fees within the income support level and the "top up" addition varied reflecting a geographical pattern. In the North East, for example this was £10 a week, in Yorkshire, £20 and the South East, £50. Where no "top up" was available the patient had little choice. The offer of a single room was rare; sharing was the norm.

The Secretary of State for Health in acknowledging our concerns has urged that all NHS authorities work with local authorities to ensure that there is seamless provision of care. But he has also assured NAHAT that he will monitor the situation carefully. In fact I am firmly convinced that on all fronts, health and local authorities should set aside past battles and suspicions, and avoid debilitating disputes over financial and care responsibilities, in order to ensure that appropriate social care services are available to people discharged from hospital.

Unless we in the NHS and you in local government can get our act together, unless we can share a vision of where we are going, unless we own common plans and goals, we are not going to deliver to the users of our service a continuum of care.

I believe also that those in local government will see the spin-off effects of the new purchasing role of district health authorities working closely with family health services authorities. In any realistic assessment of the state of the public's health it is crucial to take a wider focus. It is more important than ever we should focus on our public health responsibility including the prevention of illness and premature death and the promotion of health.

Health authorities should take a corporate view, taking into account the views of others, including local authorities, in judging local priorities. For example, in addition to local authorities' decisions on social care, their decisions about housing, education and environmental health will also impact on those of the DHA.

Looking to the future, the Department of Health's green paper on health targets has set a new agenda for all involved in the healthcare of our population. This could well set a common agenda to which local and NHS authorities can work in partnership to improve the health of the nation.

In my view, we must not let this opportunity slip. We have been given a period of grace before the care in the community reforms have to be implemented and it is crucial that period should be used as productively as possible.

ASSOCIATION OF COMMUNITY HEALTH COUNCILS FOR ENGLAND AND WALES

30 Drayton Pk., London, N5 1PB (071-609 8405).

The Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales (ACHCEW) was established under statutory instrument No. 874 "the National Health Service (The Association of Community Health Councils) Regulations 1977." The objectives of the Association are to provide a forum for the exchange of views and for the discussion of matters of common concern to member Councils, and, when appropriate, to express views on National Health Service matters to Ministers, Government Departments or other bodies and to publicise such views; also, to provide information and advisory services reasonably required by CHCs to assist them in the performance of their functions.

ACHCEW publishes a regular Newsletter, Community Health News, issues Health Briefings on matters of general interest to CHCs and the health community, and issues other publications and reports from time to time. It is particularly concerned with improving standards among CHCs and securing wider recognition of their role as the representatives of patients and communities within the NHS.

ACHCEW is mainly funded by the voluntary subscriptions of its member CHCs, most of which are in membership. There are also Regional Associations of CHCs. Grants are received from the DoH and other bodies but the combined resources available are not considered sufficient to perform all the tasks required of it.

The Annual General Meeting of ACHCEW is the governing body. The business of ACHCEW is conducted between AGMs by the Standing Committee, comprising the Officers, Regional Representatives and 5 Secretary/Observers.

HOUSING MANAGEMENT

A Review by Janet Richards, Institute of Housing

This review outlines some of the significant developments for local authority housing management during 1990–91. Local authorities faced continuing financial pressures arising from cuts in government spending and, in England, from changes to the Housing Revenue Account (HRA) subsidy arrangements. Homelessness reached record levels and the new Code of Guidance on homelessness was published. While the Commission for Racial Equality issued its Code of Practice in Rented Housing. Local authorities in England and Wales came to grips with their new duty to produce performance indicator reports for tenants. The Estate Action programme was “relaunched”, the first HAT was designated, a few more local authorities transferred their housing stock to housing associations and the Rents to Mortgages scheme was extended. The government also floated plans to introduce compulsory competitive tendering for council housing management.

Housing Finance

Capital investment in local authority housing continued to decline—in England for example, the government’s spending plans provided for expenditure of only £2,940 million in 1991/92 compared to £3,450 million in 1990/91 and £4,442 million in 1989/90.

For most English authorities HRA subsidy maintenance allowances were uprated by only 0.5 per cent above the rate of inflation. A limited form of targeting helped around 40 authorities with high maintenance spending needs, but at the expense of freezing the allowances of authorities whose historical allowances exceeded their targeted allowance by £160 or more.

A harsher subsidy penalty on empty properties was introduced in 1991/92 with the subsidy allowance for the rent lost on voids being reduced from a graduated allowance of 2–3 per cent to a flat rate of 2 per cent of the stock.

The DoE set a guideline rent increase of an average £1.84 per week on the assumption that rents would rise by 2 per cent above inflation. However, many authorities had to increase their rents by more than the guideline figure, in order to make up for the shortfall in subsidy.

In April 1991 private sector leasing schemes were brought within the capital control system making the future viability of such schemes uncertain. To ease the transition, rents paid on leases acquired between 23 October 1990 and 31 March 1992 became eligible for HRA subsidy up to a specified cash limit fixed for each authority—financed by switching £25 million from the Estate Action budget.

Local authorities were also given the new option of charging to the General Fund any leases acquired after 23 October 1990 where the properties provide temporary accommodation for homeless people. The cost of such leases was eligible for rent rebate subsidy up to 1.5 times the council’s average rent (2.5 times in London).

At the time of writing the DoE was proposing that all private sector leases acquired after April 1992 would be charged to the General Fund.

Homelessness

The number of homeless households accepted by authorities, the numbers staying in temporary accommodation and the share of new lettings made to the homeless all reached record levels. The Code of Guidance¹ on homelessness for England and Wales and The Code² for Scotland were both under review during 1990 and the revised third editions were published in 1991. The two Codes are similar but not identical and give clearer guidance on good practice than the earlier Codes. They stress the importance of monitoring the performance of homelessness functions and suggest performance targets for certain activities, such as the time taken to assess homeless applications and the time taken to notify applicants as to whether the authority accepts that they are homeless.

² Scottish Office (1991) Homelessness Part II of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987: Code of Guidance (Scotland), third edition.

CRE Code of Practice in Rented Housing

The Commission for Racial Equality's (CRE) Code of Practice in Rented Housing came into force on 1 May 1991. The Code was issued pursuant to s. 47 of the Race Relations Act 1976 as amended by s. 137 of the Housing Act 1988 and s. 180 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

The Code applies to all housing organizations in England, Wales and Scotland and relates to rented housing let on tenancies, leases and licences in both the social and private rented sectors.

The main aims of the Code are firstly, to provide detailed guidance on the operation of the Race Relations Act 1976 and the elimination of racial discrimination in regard to housing, and secondly, to give examples of good practice in implementing and promoting equal opportunities. The Code sets out what is expected of landlords, gives advice on overcoming discrimination in service delivery and on tackling racial harassment and suggests strategies for ethnic monitoring and training.

Although the Code does not impose any legal obligations, failure to observe its recommendations may result in breaches of the law where an act or omission falls within any of the specific prohibitions of the Race Relations Act and it is admissible in evidence in court proceedings under the Act.

The Code has a wider significance than race relations, in that its requirements form the basis for a housing service which is equitable to all sectors of the community and therefore compliance with the Code is one way of achieving good standards of customer care.

Performance reports for tenants

For authorities in England and Wales, 1990/91 was the first year for which they had to publish an annual performance report for tenants as required by s. 167 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

The report has to contain certain information specified by determination, relate to the financial year ending on 31 March and be given to tenants and to the Secretary of State by 30 September of that year.

Separate determinations apply to England and Wales. They generally cover the same housing management activities: such as rent arrears, repairs and maintenance, empty properties, housing allocations and staffing. However, the indicators and definitions are somewhat different and the English determination covers a broader range of activities including homelessness and housing benefit.

There has been criticism about the range of indicators as they tend to reflect the concerns of central government rather than tenants' interests. In addition most of the indicators are quantitative rather than qualitative—they demonstrate the scale of the housing management task, but do not necessarily show whether the services are effective.

Another initiative on housing management practice and performance was the extension of the Audit Commission's Quality Exchange to cover housing services. In the summer of 1991, the Quality Exchange was due to compile a database on the housing management performance and practices of all local authorities in England and Wales. This information will be published and made available to enquirers seeking advice on good practice.

Estate Action

The DoE's Estate Action programme was revamped in 1991/92 with a budget of £270 million, some £80 million higher than the previous year, achieved by switching money from the Urban Programme. The new style scheme supports larger projects than in the past, can provide funding for up to five years and places more emphasis on using private sector resources and involving tenants in improving housing management.

Housing Action Trusts

The country's first Housing Action Trust (HAT) was set up in summer 1991 on the North Hull Estate in Kingston-upon-Hull. Unlike the original six government-designated HATs, which all failed to proceed, the Hull HAT was initiated and promoted by the local authority. The HAT has a five year programme to refurbish 2,000 inter-war houses with DoE funding of £50 million. The DoE has promised to issue the council with a supplementary credit approval for the full cost of buying back any homes of tenants who elect to return to the council after the works have been completed. Another proposed voluntary HAT at Waltham Forest is currently in the pipeline pending the outcome of the tenants' ballot.

Transfers of Local Authority Stock

By the end of March 1991 the number of local authorities which had voluntarily transferred their stock to housing associations rose to fourteen. There has not yet been any estate transfer under the Tenants' Choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988. The first Tenants' Choice ballot in Great Britain was due to be held in late 1991 on Taff Ely BC's Glyntaff Farm Estate, where Newydd Housing Association proposed a takeover with the backing of the tenants' and residents' association.

Rents to Mortgages

Rents to Mortgages (RTM) became the latest government initiative to encourage tenants to become homeowners. The RTM scheme allows tenants to turn their rent into mortgage repayments, leaving a charge on the home that is paid off when it is sold.

At the Conservative Party Conference in October 1990 Michael Spicer MP, then Housing Minister, announced proposals to extend the existing pilot RTM schemes in Scotland and Wales to all council tenants. Subsequently in April 1991 the pilot RTM scheme for tenants of Scottish Homes and Scottish new towns was extended to all council tenants in Scotland. While in February 1991 the first pilot rents to mortgages scheme in England was introduced at Basildon, followed by a similar scheme in Milton Keynes.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering for Housing Management

In March 1991, Prime Minister John Major announced that the government was considering introducing compulsory competitive tendering (CCT) for local authority housing management. At the time of writing no firm proposals had been released, and it was not clear whether authorities would be required to put their whole housing management operation out to tender, or whether this would be done on a geographical or functional basis.

There are clearly many reasons why housing management does not easily lend itself to contracting out to the private sector, not least the fact that there are few potential tenderers with the necessary skills and experience to take on this kind of work. In addition housing management does not have distinct boundaries and its various activities are very much interrelated, making it difficult to introduce CCT on a functional basis.

The personal service nature of housing management and the fact that it concerns the home means that CCT will have implications for tenants far beyond those experienced by customers of existing CCT services, such as leisure and amenities. CCT does not necessarily have any benefits for tenants. Indeed where more than one agency is involved in providing different aspects of the housing management service, there could be difficulties for tenants in that they will have to communicate with more than one organization.

Furthermore, there is no indication that tenants actually want CCT, certainly the results of tenant satisfaction surveys up and down the country have revealed that most tenants are satisfied with the standard of service that they receive. It remains to be seen whether tenants will have any say in whether CCT should apply to the management of their homes.

THE HOUSING CORPORATION

Chairman: Sir Christopher Benson.

Chief Executive: D. Edmonds.

Deputy Chief Executive: B. C. Ridley.

The Housing Corporation was established in 1964 and, under the 1974 Housing Act was given a new and central role in funding and promoting the voluntary housing association movement.

The 1974 Housing Act also gave the Corporation the responsibility for the registering of housing associations before they could be eligible for public funds and the supervising of their activities, to ensure accountability for the public money in their care. Almost 2,400 associations are registered with the Corporation in England.

Since 1974 the Corporation has supported housing associations in the rehabilitation of older houses and in new building, much of it to help people with special housing needs, including the elderly, the physically or mentally handicapped and single people in hostels. Following the 1980 Housing Act, the Corporation is backing home-ownership initiatives by housing associations to extend the range of housing available through schemes for shared ownership, leasehold for the elderly and improvement for sale.

All housing associations may now sell to their tenants and tenants of non-charitable housing associations have the right to buy their homes.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF HOUSING ASSOCIATIONS

Chairman: Eric Armitage.

Director: J. Coulter.

The National Federation of Housing Associations was formed in 1935 as the central agency for housing associations, trusts and societies. It has some 2,000 members who elect its controlling National Council. Although it is grant-aided by the Department of the Environment, Housing Corporation and charitable trusts, it is a wholly independent body.

The members of the National Federation provide about 98% of the annual programme of rented, shared ownership and Improvement for Sale schemes of housing associations. Excluded are the almshouse charities which are affiliated to the National Association of Almshouses.

In total, housing associations provide over 600,000 homes. Around a third of the housing is for elderly people, about half is for families—including about 14% for single parent families—and the remainder is for single people, particularly those with special needs.

The 1988 Housing Act has meant considerable changes in the funding arrangements for housing associations with the move towards mixed funding – the combination of private and public finance – the introduction of assured tenancies and the ending of fair rents for new housing programmes provided under the 1988 Act arrangements.

The National Federation seeks to spread ideas and information among its members, to provide common services for them and to represent housing associations to government, local authorities and other bodies. It arranges residential seminars, courses and conferences, produces "Housing Associations Weekly" and a monthly magazine, "Voluntary Housing"; it carries out research and training activities and is responsible for a charitable trust that supports housing associations. The Federation's Year Book contains regional lists of housing associations on the membership roll.

The Housing Organisation Mobility and Exchanges Services is responsible for promoting opportunities for mobility in the public and social housing sectors. In April 1990 it was created from the amalgamation of the National Mobility Office, London Area Mobility Schemes and the Housing Association Liaison Project (HALO).

It runs a number of nomination schemes though which tenants are nominated by one a computer matching service and landlord to another. Whether or not to rehouse individual applicants is in the gift of the receiving landlord.

HOMES also runs two exchange schemes which seek to help tenants to swap homes by providing lists of people who wish to move. The London Mutual Exchange Bureau assists people who move within London. The Tenants Exchange Scheme is available for people wishing to move anywhere else in the UK including into and out of London (except for those moving within Northern Ireland).

There is an Exchange Advice-Line on 071-222 0356 for tenants registered on the exchange schemes to telephone with any queries they may have about their exchange registration.

HOMES is controlled by a Board made up of representatives from local authority associations, housing association bodies and other interested parties, HOMES is a company limited by guarantee & receives grants from DOE—England, Scottish Development Department, Welsh Office and the DOE Northern Ireland.

THE INSTITUTE OF HOUSING

Octavia Hse., Westwood Business Pk., Westwood Way, Coventry, CV4 8JP (0203 694433).

Originally known as the Institute of Housing Managers, the present Institute of Housing was formed in 1965 as the result of a merger of the former Institute of Housing with the Society of Housing Managers. Since that time it has been the professional body in Britain exclusively concerned with the practice of housing, its standards and ideals, and the education and training of the people engaged in it.

Its main aims are to promote the profession of housing practice in both the public and private sectors; to provide the central organisation for those engaged in the profession; and to provide opportunities for the dissemination of knowledge on the subject of housing.

In order to achieve these aims, the Institute performs a wide range of functions. It provides through its examinations, a professional qualification recognised as the main qualification for housing management. It runs a variety of short training courses on housing. It organises an annual national conference with an associated housing exhibition, as well as holding a number of regional conferences. It publishes the monthly journal Housing together with a Year book and list of members. It represents the profession in responding, at national level, to policy and legislative proposals, and advises, both nationally and locally, on the organisation of the housing service and associated professional practice.

The Institute has a membership of 10,000 among branches throughout the United Kingdom and in Hong Kong.

The list above though comprising many of the varied responsibilities of local authorities is by no means comprehensive. For example, mention has not been made of the provision in the Shops Act 1950, permitting Jewish Traders to open on Sundays if registered for that purpose; neither have the special powers granted to many authorities in private Acts.

The ways and means by which Councils carry out their functions are many. Some large authorities concentrate the bulk of the work in a separate department under an independent Chief Officer, as a study of the Principal Officers in the Main Directory will show. They name it the Public Control Department and it is an apt title. (Other authorities distribute the tasks among various departments and a variety of staff.) It is probably accurate to say that, exclusive of the licensing work, a proportion of these diverse duties falls on the shoulders of the Trading Standards Officers and that Environmental Health Officers get their fair share of the burden in many areas.

It is possible that in some areas the function may be exercised by another local authority under an agency agreement.

DRIVER AND VEHICLE LICENSING

Department of Transport, Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, Longview Road, Swansea SA6 7JL.

Chief Executive: Stephen Curtis.

DRIVER LICENSING

All driving licences, other than Diplomatic and Consular licences, are issued by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) in Swansea. The legal framework for driver licensing is contained mainly in two statutes. The Road Traffic Act 1988, the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988. A full licence runs until the day before your 70th birthday or for three years, whichever is the longer—except that if you have certain medical conditions, you may be given a licence running for a shorter period: one, two or three years. Licences can be renewed on or after your 70th birthday and will run for three years or less, depending upon the circumstances—though with the possibility of further renewals.

VEHICLE REGISTRATION AND LICENSING

First licensing and registration is carried out by Vehicle Registration Offices (VROs). Details of each new registration are forwarded by the VRO to DVLA. Once a vehicle record is held at the Agency, subsequent straightforward licence renewals are over the counter at some 3,800 post offices dealing with vehicle licensing. Alternatively applications may be made by post to the Head Postmaster (MVL Duty) at the nearest Head Post Office (NOT to DVLA Swansea). Licence renewal applications may be made on the Swansea produced reminder form V11 only if the conditions printed on it can be satisfied otherwise a form V10 must be used. The V10 is obtainable at all Post Offices and instructions regarding its use are printed on the form itself.

GENERAL ENQUIRIES

Any enquiries on driver or vehicle registration or licensing matters may be directed to either the Driver Enquiry Unit (0792) 772151 or Vehicle Enquiry Unit (0792) 772134 as appropriate.

FAIRS

The Municipal Year Book continues in this edition a survey of fairs held and/or licensed by London boroughs and district councils in England and Wales. The information may well prove to be of interest to historians, but the purpose of asking local authorities to complete questionnaires was to establish a directory on one of the lesser known duties of local government, a duty, nevertheless, which adds responsibility to officers such as chief executives, directors of technical services, and directors and managers of parks and recreation grounds. The survey sought to concentrate on long established fairs and carnivals but includes some itinerant amusement caterers, whose visits are of a casual or irregular nature.

NATIONAL PARKS AND COUNTRYSIDE CONSERVATION

A Review by David Brooke, Countryside Commission

Britain is fortunate to possess an outstandingly diverse and beautiful countryside, ranging from the peaks of the western highlands to the mudflats and marshes of our major estuaries. But this countryside has been influenced by man for millennia. It has a landscape which needs continuous management to maintain its beauty. Recent years have seen much that has helped the sensitive use of the countryside, and 1990 has been no exception. A number of major initiatives and themes provide optimism for an environmentally friendly future.

A White Paper on the Environment

The government published a White Paper on the Environment in September 1990. Its title, "This Common Inheritance" reflected its aim to present a major, comprehensive survey of all aspects of environmental concern—"from street corner to stratosphere, from human health to endangered species". The White Paper, in defining the problems and preparing programmes of action for its own departments, organizations and individuals, marks a large step forward in promoting environmental concern.

A Review of National Parks

The National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 paved the way for the designation of ten national parks in England and Wales in the 1950s (and indirectly for the establishment of the Broads Authority in 1989). The Act embodied the hopes and ideals that many had fought to achieve over decades and as such it has served the nation well. Lord Sandford conducted an influential review of national parks in 1972 which defined the direction for future policy and action but by the late 1980s, there was a growing opinion that the legislation, which is now some forty years old, needed a fundamental appraisal.

The Countryside Commission accordingly established a National Parks Review Panel under the Chairmanship of Professor Ron Edwards in late 1989 to assess the ways in which national park purposes might most effectively be achieved in the future. The Panel of thirteen members worked throughout 1990, taking an enormous amount of evidence, visiting the national parks and drawing together its findings.

The Panel's report "Fit for the Future" (the Edwards Report) was presented to the Countryside Commission and published in March 1991. It is a comprehensive and detailed examination of national park policies and programmes set against a broad vision for the future. The report contains many recommendations for the national park authorities, the Commission and ministers to take up. A good number cover highly detailed aspects of park management but others call for broader changes to national park objectives and administration.

The Panel was satisfied that spirit of the original two national park purposes is still pertinent today—but that the wording is in need of considerable refinement. It is recommended that the conservation of national park landscapes, for instance, should be comprehensive in approach, to include the scenic beauty, natural systems and land forms, together with wildlife and the cultural heritage. Recreation in national parks should be based on quiet enjoyment, where it is consistent with the primary purpose of conservation.

The Panel also examined the topics which stem from those new objectives and made recommendations on environmental conservation, quiet enjoyment and understanding, farming and forestry, rural development, military use, planning, training, research and the voluntary sector. It also looked particularly at the administrative arrangements of national parks and recommended that those park authorities that were part of county councils should become autonomous bodies, with members from all constituent local authorities (both county and district) together with those nominated by the Secretary of State for the Environment or for Wales.

"Fit for the Future" has been distributed widely. The Countryside Commission will be examining the recommendations and advising government on its conclusions during 1991.

Countryside Stewardship

For much of the post war period, agricultural policy has been governed by the need to produce more food. Grants and support systems were introduced to make farming highly efficient and productive though, in doing so, they dramatically changed the landscape of much of the country. Large fields replaced small, moorland was reclaimed and herb rich meadows were converted to intensive pasture. As time changed—particularly with the growing European “food mountains”—land management with a strong conservation element gained a bigger foothold, though often based on management agreements and compensation measures.

The introduction of Environmentally Sensitive Areas in the mid 1980s charted a new course of genuine and realistic incentives for farmers to manage their land in an environmentally friendly manner. Drawing on this, the Countryside Commission has designed a national incentive scheme—the Countryside Stewardship Scheme—which offers financial support through area payments for farmers who wish to follow traditional—and so less profitable—management practices. Countryside Stewardship thus supports the farms of low intensity grazing and land management which helped to create much of the past beauty of the English countryside.

At present, farmers in five major landscape types are eligible for Countryside Stewardship Schemes.

- * Chalk and limestone grassland—a distinctive scenery with a rich landscape habitat much of which has disappeared under the plough.
- * Lowland heath—now much fragmented following widespread reclamation for forestry and farming.
- * River valleys and waterside landscapes—the meadows and wetlands associated with rivers and watercourses.
- * Coastal land—currently under threat from many pressures.
- * Uplands—a limited option to assist traditional management in the enclosed areas of the uplands.

Within these areas of the countryside, farmers are able to agree management prescriptions with the Countryside Commission which must sustain or return to traditional practices which enhance the scenic beauty of the land, with its wildlife and historical features, and which will provide opportunities for people to enjoy the countryside through better access.

Negotiations for the first of these agreements will start in 1991.

A new national forest

The creation of a new national forest in the Midlands was announced. As the beginning of what Sir Derek Barber, the then Chairman of the Countryside Commission, described as “one of the most ambitious and imaginative countryside initiatives of this century and of the next”.

For some years, the Commission has been developing the idea of a large forest which could be a blend of woods, fields, towns and villages, with about half its area under trees, mostly of broadleaved species. The benefits would be several. The enhancement of the landscape is of prime importance, to which can be added the improvement of access and enjoyment; the positive use of agricultural land which otherwise might be surplus to the requirements of food production; the clearance of derelict land; and a small part of the nation's contribution to combating global warming. The Commission is taking an active lead in establishing the new national forest but it is also looking for active involvement of both public and private sectors.

After exhaustive search and keen competition from five front runners, the Commission formally chose an area of about 150 square miles to the north and east of Birmingham, in Leicestershire, Derbyshire, Warwickshire and Staffordshire. At the heart of this area is the ancient forests of Charnwood and Needwood. The first trees of the new national forest have now been planted in an initiative that will cost two or three million pounds and will be thirty years in the making.

In a complementary programme, the Countryside Commission is promoting the idea of Community Forests. These areas, which will be the same mix of trees, fields and settlements, will be smaller in extent than the new national forest, but their size will still be considerable. Planning for three Community Forests was started in 1990, in Tyne & Wear, South Staffordshire and East London. There, they will add much to a landscape blighted by past uses and neglect, and they will also provide much needed recreational opportunities for those who live in the nearby towns.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

The National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 defined criteria for designating Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONB)—often large tracts of countryside with a quality of scenery that needs protection and enhancement at national and local level.

Some 44 AONBs were designated between 1956 and 1988 and, with only two more in the pipeline, the coverage is almost complete. However, the need to conserve the landscapes of AONBs is not always matched by a commitment of resources and activity by the relevant authorities. Because of this, the Countryside Commission undertook a review of its policies for AONBs in 1990—the first for some twelve years. The review, published in July 1990, pointed to the need firstly for a greater commitment towards the concept of AONBs from all levels of government, and secondly for a mechanism for their management. Most AONBs cross several administrative boundaries and the Commission sees some form of jointly constituted authority—together with an "AONB Officer"—as essential to progress.

The AONB review also identified a need for consistent planning policies, the development of opportunities to extend conservation and visitor management, management plans, and AONB countryside services.

Rights of Way Act 1990

England and Wales have an intricate network of public rights of way, parts of which are centuries old, but which now has an additional recreational purpose. Landscape conservation loses much of its point if it is hidden from view and many authorities now see the use of the public footpaths and bridleways as an important part of the countryside enjoyment.

Rights of Way legislation is well codified but its enforcement has for long been a weakness. Among the most serious and common problems faced by footpath users—and the footpath authorities—are paths that have been ploughed or obstructed by dense crops. Enforcement has always been difficult and contentious but recent legislation—the Rights of Way Act 1990—has greatly clarified the rights and responsibilities associated with these paths. The Act now restricts the cultivation of the routes of public rights of way and insists on a rapid reinstatement of the surface. In tidying up this single ambiguity in previous legislation, the Rights of Way Act has achieved much for those who wish to explore the deeper countryside on horseback or foot.

COUNTRYSIDE COMMISSION

John Dower Hse., Crescent Pl., Cheltenham, Glos GL50 3RA (0242 521381).

The Countryside Commission was established by the Countryside Act 1968 in place of the National Parks Commission. Under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 its status was changed to that of a grant-in-aid body corporate. The Commission's duty is to conserve the natural beauty of the countryside of England and Wales and to improve and extend opportunities for people to enjoy it. The Commission is an advisory and promotional body and achieves its practical objectives through collaboration with others—local authorities, public agencies, voluntary bodies, landowners and private individuals. Commissioners are appointed jointly by the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales.

The Commission is the Government's adviser on countryside matters. It has special responsibility for designating national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty, establishing long distance footpaths and bridleways, e.g., the Pennine Way, Offa's Dyke Path, and of defining heritage coasts. There are ten national parks—the Peak District, Lake District, Dartmoor, Exmoor, North York Moors, Yorkshire Dales, Northumberland, Snowdonia, Pembrokeshire Coast and the Brecon Beacons—and the Broads has an equivalent status. The addresses of the administering authorities and of the National Park Officers are given under "National Parks" later in this section.

The Commission promotes understanding of the countryside among decision makers, landowners and managers, and the general public, undertakes research to establish the facts about landscape change and leisure needs, and gives grants for recreation footpaths, tree planting, ranger services, country parks, picnic sites, visitor centres and other projects which help the public to enjoy and appreciate the countryside.

COUNTRYSIDE RECREATION RESEARCH ADVISORY GROUP

Several government agencies have powers to undertake research into aspects of countryside recreation in England, Scotland and Wales. In order to ensure that these powers are used as effectively as possible, the agencies concerned agreed in January 1968 to establish the Countryside Recreation Research Advisory Group (CRRAG). Subsequent legislation made appropriate the widening of membership of CRRAG. Associate membership is available to any organisation or individual with an interest in this subject.

AIMS

- * to identify and help to meet the needs of policymakers in the agencies concerned with countryside recreation for advice, information and research.
- * to promote co-operation between member agencies in formulating and executing research on countryside recreation.
- * to encourage and assist the dissemination of the results of countryside recreation research.

NATIONAL PARKS

As provided in Local Government Act 1972, the administration of national parks from 1 April 1974 became the responsibility of new National Park Committees or, in the case of the Lake district and the Peak District National Parks, a new special or joint planning board. It was the duty of the county council to establish the committee for each national park. For a park situated in two or more counties (a multi-county park) the committee is to be established by one of the councils by agreement, or in the absence of such agreement jointly by the councils concerned. The planning boards are constituted by orders made by the Secretary of State for the Environment under Section 1 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. In all cases, with the approval of the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Countryside Commission, the new park authority may be given responsibilities in respect of land outside the area of the national park. A third of the members of these park authorities are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Wales, as appropriate, on the recommendation of the Countryside Commission: their staffs are headed by a National Park officer. It is the responsibility of these authorities to conserve and enhance the natural beauty and amenity of the parks and to promote their enjoyment by the public. Special supplementary block grants are paid in accordance with the provisions of the Local Government Act 1974 towards the total costs of administering the parks for the national benefit.

National parks are not publicly owned and designation confers on the public no right of access; in fact, much of the land, farmland, for instance, is in private ownership, as elsewhere. Rights of access in national parks are the same as in other parts of the countryside and any additional access facilities have to be specially negotiated by agreement with the landowner or, failing agreement, by an access order. The ten national parks, listed below, extend over 5,258 square miles, about 9 per cent of the total area of England and Wales. There are warden services and information centres in the parks to help visitors.

The following notes include the names, addresses and telephone numbers of the national parks authorities and of their officers. The Editor is grateful for the help of the Countryside Commission and of the County Councils Association, along with the County Treasurers Society in extending the information this year to include services provided for the public in each park.

BROADS AUTHORITY

Thomas Harvey Hse., 18 Colegate, Norwich, NR3 1BQ (0603 610734)

The Broads Authority was established in 1978 as a Local Authority Joint Committee. Its constituent members were Norfolk and Suffolk County Councils and the six local District Councils, together with Great Yarmouth Port and Haven Commissioners and the regional water authority, Anglian Water.

Following the enactment of the Norfolk and Suffolk Broads Act 1988, a special statutory new Broads Authority was set up with effect from 1 April, 1989 to takeover from the old Authority. Its functions are to develop, conserve and manage the area for the purposes of conserving and enhancing its natural beauty, promoting the enjoyment of the Broads by the public, and protecting the interests of navigation. The Authority's executive area comprises principally the tidal reaches of the Rivers Bure, Yare and Waveney and their tributaries the Rivers Thurne, Ant and Chet.

The new Authority receives 75% of its funding from central government and maintains close links with the Countryside Commission and the Nature Conservancy Council.

Chief Executive: M. A. Clark.

LEE VALLEY REGIONAL PARK AUTHORITY

Chief Executive: T. Limna, DIC, CEng, MStructE, MILAM.

Director of Marketing: J. N. T. Baker-Bates.

The Authority was set up on 1 January 1967, under the Lee Valley Regional Park Act 1966. It is a body appointed from their membership by the 32 London Boroughs and the City of London (following the abolition of the Greater London Council), the Hertfordshire and Essex County Councils and three District Councils. This project is the first practical example of a "green wedge" policy as opposed to a green belt policy, bringing the countryside into areas of dense population.

There are over 4 million visits made each year.

The duty of the Authority is to develop the Park area of about 10,000 acres in the Lee Valley for recreation, sport, entertainment and the enjoyment of leisure. The project is financed by levies on the London Boroughs, the City of London, and the Hertfordshire and Essex County Councils.

INSTITUTE OF LEISURE AND AMENITY MANAGEMENT

Lower Basildon, Reading, Berks., RG8 9NE (0491 874222; Fax 0491 874059).

This Institute came into being on the 1st January, 1983 as a result of the amalgamation of the Association of Recreation Managers, the Institute of Municipal Entertainment, the Institute of Park and Recreation Administration, and the Institute of Recreation Management.

The aims of the Institute are to maintain a professional organisation for those practitioners in the management of Leisure and Amenity provision in the widest sense; by training, conferences and seminars to provide a forum for the interchange of opinions and experiences; by examination to provide a career structure for those persons aspiring to management in the whole range of recreation facilities.

The Institute, with its permanent Secretariat at Lower Basildon, is controlled by a National Council and is divided into geographical regions. Each region with its Chairman, Secretary and Committee arranges its own programme of seminars, lectures and visits to places of interest covering the range of activities with which the members are involved.

With approximately 6000 members managing such diverse activities as Allotments, Caravan Sites, Entertainment, Museums, Nurseries, Parks, Sports Hall, Swimming Pools and Yachting Marinas, the Institute is in a unique position to advise at both National and Local Government level on all aspects of Leisure and Amenity provision.

THE BRITISH RESORTS ASSOCIATION

The Association was originally known as the Association of Health and Pleasure Resorts and since 1921 has flourished as an active organisation in the field of tourism, holidays and leisure activities. The Membership is comprised of tourism orientated Local Authorities and National and Regional Tourist Boards. It has reshaped its image and procedures to meet the changing conditions within its field of activities and the reforms affecting Local Government.

Very briefly the aims and objects of the Association are to keep a watching brief on matters affecting the mutual interests of its membership, to take such action as may be necessary or advisable to protect and promote those interests and to act as a clearing house for information of value to members.

The Association is in constant touch with Government departments on proposed legislation or policies which might affect its membership. The Association maintains a close link with the British Tourist Authority and the four National Tourist Boards.

A close relationship also exists between the Association, the Institute of Leisure & Amenity Management, the British Association of Tourist Officers and the Institute of Entertainment of Arts Management.

Hon. Secretary: I. G. Gill, LVO, LLB, FTS, P.O. Box 9, Margate, Kent, CT9 1XZ (0843 225511).

BRITISH ASSOCIATION OF TOURIST OFFICERS

The Association was founded as the Association of Publicity and Development Officers, on 14th December, 1932. Owing to the War its activities were in abeyance from March 1940 to January 1946. By this time the Industrial Development Officers had largely ceased to be interested and on the 21st January, 1948 the name was changed to the Association of Resort Publicity Officers.

In keeping with modern terminology, the Association changed its name again in 1972 and became the British Association of Resort Tourist Officers, and again in October 1974 following the Local Government Re-Organisation, the Title of the Association was changed to the British Association of Tourist Officers.

The Association has a membership of over 150 Officers who are primarily responsible for promoting tourism within their Local Authority or Regional Areas.

The Association is represented on the European Union of Tourist Officers.

The objects of the Association are:

- (a) To study the best methods of developing and promoting the tourist facilities of the various localities within the United Kingdom and to make such study more systematic and practical through the interchange of views and the comparison of experience.
- (b) To promote co-operation and unity of purpose between Local or National Publicity Organisations, Local Authorities and all other bodies engaged or interested directly or indirectly in the development of tourism.
- (c) To compile and publish reports and to make recommendations to Local Authorities, Government Departments, National and Regional Boards and any other organisations concerned with the development and promotion of tourism both at home and overseas.
- (d) To examine any aspect of legislation affecting the development and promotion of tourism and to take such actions as may be deemed necessary.
- (e) To organise and encourage the education and training of its members in the profession and practice of tourism development and promotion.
- (f) To arrange such activities as may be desirable to further the objects of the Association.

President 1991/93: J. T. Owen, Marketing & Information Manager, Northumbria Tourist Board, Ayklay Heads, Durham, Co. Durham.

Hon. Gen. Secretary: R. Matthews, c/o Plymouth Marketing Bureau, St Andrews Court, 12 St Andrews Street, Plymouth, PL1 2AH. Tel (0752) 261125. Fax (0752) 674303.

IBRM is the national professional body for sport and recreation facility management. It aims to improve the management and operation of leisure centres, sports facilities and swimming pools through the provision of training, advice and consultancy services.

Founded in 1921, IBRM has a membership of over 1,200 highly qualified professionals employed at all levels in the leisure industry, from first line managers to local government department heads. Associates, affiliates and students bring the total membership up to over 2,300 specialists in sport and recreation facility management.

IBRM provides training opportunities directly through its own short course programme and, indirectly, through numerous colleges of further and higher education. It has a carefully structured training programme, aimed at all levels in the recreation industry and a related series of qualifications which are recognised by the Local Government Training Board and the National Employers Organisation for Local Authority staff.

The Education & Training Programme recognises three main levels:

Leisure Technician Scheme: a broad based vocational training and accreditation programme which focuses on health and safety, effective customer care and the efficient technical operation of sport and recreation facilities.

Recreation Management Certificate: a prestigious nationally recognised qualification relating to the management of sports halls, leisure centres, swimming pools and associated facilities.

Diploma: a higher level examination for qualified IBRM members.

WHO PAYS THE PIPER?—WHO CALLS THE TUNE?

A Review

The public service, by definition, is paid for by the public and exists to serve the public and a few years ago most people had a pretty fair idea of what it embraced. Within it they would have recognised the Central Government departments, the local authorities, The Health Service and the nationalised public utilities. Without a doubt also they would have been aware that it employed armies of people all of which had to be paid for from the public purse replenished annually by taxes and rates. That it is changing extensively is abundantly apparent, but how many can grasp the implications of those changes, particularly as they apply to the personnel involved?

What was never very clear to those who pay the piper, namely the general public, is the distinction between which are the employers and which are the employees. On the face of it it is quite simple. The public are ultimately the employers through their elected representatives. The employees are those paid to carry out the policies defined by their political masters i.e. the same elected representatives. It is essential to hold on to this basic concept if there is to be any understanding of the convolutions which are so characteristic of the public service over the past fifty years and which show no sign of being any less tortuous than they have ever been. It all comes down in the end to who holds the power, in other words "who calls the tune?".

In a democratic society it is, without a doubt, those who are elected to make the policies and to set the demands and standards, but they would be utterly helpless without the services of the paid servants to put their policies into practice and to receive their assessments of the options available to them. This demands qualities on both sides which are special and seldom to be found in the wider ranges of the private sector. A key element is how much scope should be given to the professionals to get on with the job before coming back to the politicians. The Gulf War provides a very clear example. Nobody questioned that the prosecution of the war rested with the commander in the field, yet the final decision on when to stop the war rested, not with him, but the elected representative, in this case the President of the United States.

Now we begin to move into the complexities. In Central Government the majority political party provides the government of the day and takes on the formulation of policy and the overall direction of the Civil Service. The same might be said of each of the 540 local authorities which, within their domain, have the elected councillors in the majority group directing the efforts of the public servants they employ from Chief Executive, Chief Officers and throughout the ranks of each of the departments. Local authorities however have never found it possible to remain isolated autonomous units and for a great variety of reasons find it necessary to form groupings and to pursue collective policies, not least in the representations they make to Central Government, hence the existence of the Local Authority Associations such as the Association of County Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Association of District Councils. That each of the national bodies has to find accommodation for a wide spectrum of political representation and also to reconcile the differences in the nature, size, aspirations and geographical location of the authorities they represent and the tensions this creates is more than obvious from the press reports.

It is against this background that one has to view the complex pattern of relationships, not only between one authority and the next, but between central and local government with regard to the very large numbers of people collectively employed. At its peak local government alone employed in excess of 3 million people.

As far back as 1947 local authorities, faced with increasing pressures nationally from the Trades Unions, notably Nalgo at that time, saw the need for a national employers body to represent their interests. Not only did this have to encompass the diversities of the authorities themselves, but also the local authority associations and the provincial councils which were already partially filling this role at a more local level. This led to the creation of the Local Authorities Conditions of Service Advisory Board (LACSAB). From that time onward LACSAB provided the secretariat which serviced the national negotiating councils which ultimately covered such diverse bodies as manual workers, professional and technical staff, chief executives, chief officers, teachers, police, fire and many more. The employers sides, in each case, were made up of elected councillors representing all local authorities and all types of authority from counties, cities, boroughs to the wide range of rural authorities. Bearing in mind the range of conflicting interests and cross currents one might have imagined it to be totally unworkable, but it survived and for many years adapted to the extraordinary changes and pressures to which local government has been exposed.

In the earlier years the nationally agreed scales of pay and conditions were strictly applied resulting in a rigid structure over the whole of local government and this, in itself, came to present a very considerable dilemma to successive governments. Any one of the major annual settlements covering sometimes up to a million employees created enormous pressures and precedents for the whole of the economy. In the battle to contain and lower inflation each government in turn attempted to devise systems to regulate the annual upsurge in the cost of human resources and the effect it had on inflation. Throughout the seventies wage freezes, wage pauses, wage limitations related to inflation followed in great variety. One Cabinet Minister of the time was heard to say ruefully that it was easy to go into a wage freeze but diabolically difficult to come out again. This in itself created tremendous pressures and few who were around at the time will forget the "dirty jobs" strike, the ambulance workers strike, the fire services strike and the green goddesses, the teachers strikes and go slows and a long series of other disputes. The "Winter of Discontent" is part of history, with the ill-fated attempts of the government of the time to persuade unions to enter into voluntary compacts to restrict pay and inflation. The fact that none of this met with outstanding success calls into question whether the direct intervention of central government in the exchanges between employers and employees serves any sort of useful purpose.

Direct intervention inevitably ensures that the pressures drift from the negotiators to central government at which point any concession creates overwhelming precedents for the rest of the economy. The first priority of any union, as it embarks on an annual wage negotiation, is to catch up ground which has been lost—by comparison with other groups—over the previous twelve months. The next priority is to get ahead of the field and to have a buffer to draw on as other groups negotiating subsequently start to pull ahead again and the third priority is to enhance the position in the pecking order which all other groups are bound to resent and resist. All of this runs directly contrary to any government policy designed to hold down pay increases in the bid to reduce inflation.

Rather than face direct confrontation successive governments have resorted to Commissions, Tribunals, Arbitrations and the setting up of Pay Review bodies and this continues to this day. The agonising situation into which this places central government is that it is no longer in control of the outcome since it has referred the decision to an independent body whose judgement might prove to be completely at odds with the general target of pay settlements which the government has in mind.

Coming in from a different angle is another method of attempted central control namely for the government to turn off the financial tap by saying "We are no longer prepared to support financially pay settlements which are outside the limits we think are appropriate—if you, the negotiators, go beyond this you must find the means for yourselves". When this method was applied some years ago local government, faced with this edict, took whatever money was available from central government and raised the excess from money raised locally. Central government then retaliated by placing increasingly restrictive limits on the money which authorities are allowed to raise locally. Any authority, placed in this situation, has the alternative either of restricting the levels of increase it offers to its employees or by finding the money by the more efficient use of its resources or by cutting back on its services and by the same token reducing its labour force. More often than not it is a combination of all three.

One of the criticisms traditionally levelled at the public service and frequently at local government is that it is complacent, feather-bedded, unimaginative and not subject to the criteria of efficiency applying to the private sector—a criticism not wholly justified because the best in local government matches anything found in the industrial or commercial field. In recent years the government's answer to this has been to introduce, by one means or another, competition into large sectors of the public service. Local government, for example, is now obliged to put large sectors of its services out to tender. The monolithic nationalised industries have been progressively privatised, the Health service is going through the trauma of having competition introduced into its system. This in turn places increasing emphasis on local prices and local pay which turns away from the massive national negotiations which were so much a feature of the past. What is perhaps extraordinary is to see some elements going in completely the opposite direction in the shape of pay review bodies which introduce a central element and control far in excess of the national negotiations which existed in the past.

It is perhaps no accident that one of the main focal points namely LACSAB has undergone a transformation, emerging as the Local Government Management Board incorporating the Local Government Training Board and some of the functions of the ill-fated LAMSAC.

Placing all of the above elements into some sort of perspective adds up to a fascinating future. National negotiations are still in place although much diminished in scope and authority. Local government, financially, is drastically constrained and probably facing once again extensive re-organisation. Competition is the golden word and pay related to performance growing in importance.

Altogether 1992 could be an interesting year.

Chief Executive: Michael Clarke, MA.

41 Belgrave Sq., London, SW1X 8NZ (071-235 6081; Fax 071-235 1257)
Arndale Hse., Arndale Centre, Luton, LU1 2TS (0582 451166).

On 1 April 1991, the Local Authorities Conditions of Service Advisory Board (LACSAB) and the Local Government Training Board (LGTB) merged to form the Local Government Management Board.

NEGOTIATIONS DIRECTORATE

Director: Charles Nolda, 41 Belgrave Square, London SW1X 8NZ (071-235 6081)

These functions are to co-ordinate the activities of the employers' sides of local government wage negotiating organisations, to provide a joint secretariat for those bodies and to maintain liaison with other employers.

Local authorities collectively employ more than 2.3 million men and women—around 9 to 10 per cent of the working population.

The need for sound industrial relations and efficiency in utilisation of staff is underlined by the fact that employment costs account for 70 per cent of local government current expenditure. This alone ensures that the work of the Board is of central importance both to local government and the economy as a whole. The total wage and salary bill is over £30 billion a year which makes local government one of the biggest single "industries" in Britain.

Activities of the Board. The employers in the negotiating bodies—as in individual local authorities—are elected councillors. The Board maintains an overall view of employment in local government to enable them to advise local authorities, local authority associations, national employers, provincial councils and other agencies on the staffing and pay implications of policies. In doing so they take into account the scope, tasks and financing of local authorities which are the policy areas of the local authority associations.

The pattern of negotiations. Most of the local authority negotiating bodies are based on the style of Whitley councils. The importance of Whitleyism is the tradition of a joint approach to common problems.

On each national negotiating body there are two "sides"; one representing the employers and the other the employees through their recognised trade unions.

There are some two dozen national negotiating councils and committees.

Advice. The council of the Board may offer advice to the negotiating bodies (employers' sides); this is not mandatory, although it would never be lightly disregarded. Each group of national employers, in the course of negotiation, must therefore exercise their judgement to arrive at settlements which reflect the wishes of local government as a whole.

The employers' chairman. Each side of a national council elects their own chairman. The employers' chairman is always an elected councillor from among the number nominated to serve on the council or committee. Before meeting jointly with a staff side the employers seek to evolve a common line of approach upon which they can all agree. Since this involves reconciling differences generated by geography, political views, types and size of authority and the policies of the respective local authority associations this is seldom an easy task and much weight falls upon the employers' chairman to achieve a consensus.

The employers' secretary. The Director of Negotiations is also the secretary of each of the national negotiating bodies. It is his task to ensure that the employers' chairman and the employers' side are properly briefed and acquainted with all the relevant information; the salient points of each issue; and the options available, together with the cost implications. The employers' secretary takes a major part in presenting the employers' viewpoint and proposals at the joint meeting.

The joint meetings. The national councils and committees usually alternate the chairmanship of the joint meetings between the chairman of the employers' side and the chairman of the employees' side—year by year about. In some bodies, eg the Police Negotiating Board, an independent chairman presides.

The staff side of each council and committee appoint a secretary, who together with the employers' side secretary becomes the joint secretary of the national council.

In the course of negotiation there are often informal discussions directed towards identifying where agreements might be found, but any offer and its acceptance must take place in the council or committee with elected members on both sides signifying their acceptance. Decisions are reached on the basis of majority voting on each side.

The day-to-day dialogue between the joint secretaries at its best permits the early identification of problems coming forward for negotiation which enables each side to start from a good appreciation of the others' point of view. In times of difficulty and dispute it sometimes provides the only tenuous contact between the two sides until reason once again prevails and the two sides meet for negotiation.

National and local. The acceptance of agreements is dependent upon authorities standing by agreements voluntarily entered into at national level. This demands great tolerance since every national agreement is based upon consensus and may have a different impact upon individual authorities.

The integrity of agreements often depends on the consultation which precedes them. At a time when local government as a whole and authorities individually operate under mounting financial pressure the importance of wide consultation can scarcely be over-emphasised. Recent negotiations have seen renewed commitment to this process.

Similarly a vital function of the employers' side of each of the national councils is to maintain contact throughout the year, by every means available, with the "grass roots" of local government where agreements are implemented and where shortcomings are felt at first hand. For this the elected members must be extremely well informed so that they can develop forward looking plans for negotiation with the unions. It demands an ability to adapt constantly to new attitudes and problems.

The elected member of a local authority who finds himself or herself on the employers' side of a national council accepts a challenging task to find and maintain the delicate balance between the wide range views of local authorities and their respective associations, the claims and aspirations of local government employees and their unions and the policies of the government of the day.

National agreements are circulated to every authority and in most cases incorporated into a service handbook, eg APT&C "Purple Book".

Provincial Councils. Working closely in conjunction with the nationwide negotiating machinery are the provincial councils in England and Wales, in Scotland the Scottish councils, and in Northern Ireland the Northern Ireland council. (This applies only to administrative, professional, technical and clerical staff, manual workers and building and civil engineering employees and engineering craftsmen).

Each provincial council consists of employer members and staff sides including full-time officers of the appropriate unions. There is the same "joint" system as in the national councils and the procedure follows the Whitley pattern.

Among the important tasks of provincial councils is the interpretation and application of national agreements as they affect the authorities within the area. They have also other important functions in such matters as disputes, appeals and conciliation procedures and operate their own provincial agreements on many issues. Increasingly the provincial employers' secretariats, which also cover training, are concentrating on an employers' advisory role.

Obviously, with such a network, the provincial councils and their secretariats provide an ideal two-way channel for passing information and views between national and local level.

Disputes, Appeals and Conciliation. In addition to their role of settling pay and conditions, the negotiating bodies have the responsibility for interpreting their own agreements, providing the machinery for resolving difficulties and settling disputes and grading appeals through conciliation or arbitration. The provincial and national disputes procedures are used only when there is failure to agree locally.

HUMAN RESOURCE ISSUES DIRECTORATE (LGMB)

Director: Time Rothwell

This Directorate provides information, materials, advice and support to promote local government as an attractive employer and to assist local authorities in appointing and retaining good quality staff. This includes producing and marketing careers materials; developing a careers information service; and providing information to local authorities on recruitment and retention initiatives.

It also assists local authorities to identify, analyse and address existing and potential skills shortages, and encourages authorities to take account of equality issues in their employment policies and practices.

The Directorate also advises on employment law developments, personnel management policies and the development of the personnel management function, human resource implications of major policy issues affecting local government, including the development of the Single European Market.

The Directorate also acts as secretariat to the United Kingdom Steering Committee on Local Government Superannuation (UKSC). This includes the servicing of UKSC committees and working parties, liaising with central government departments and advising local authorities on developments.

TRAINING AND DEVELOPMENT DIRECTORATE (LGMB)

Director: Richard Taylor

The Training and Development Directorate brings together the work of three units, Professional and Vocational Development, Examinations and Employment Surveys and Research.

The Professional and Vocational Development Unit works with local authorities to develop workforces with a high level of competence. A principle initiative is the development of new vocational qualifications. These will support more qualification training and encourage career development, mobility between parts of local government and between different sectors of employment. They will produce a workforce whose competences can be clearly understood and whose qualifications have national credibility. Their development will place a premium on equality of opportunity which the Board sees as synonymous with good management practice.

The unit is also concerned with the acceptance of the basic principles of vocational qualifications in professional areas, working closely with local government, trade unions and professional bodies.

The Unit will also equip local authority trainers to cope with the changing world of local government and will ensure training features as a high priority for local government decision makers and opinion formers.

The Examinations Unit administers eight different sets of examinations: the promotion examinations for the police force and the fire service; the qualifying examinations for the Diplomas in Careers Guidance, Trading Standards and Domiciliary Care Management and the examinations for the Distance Learning Scheme operated jointly with NALGO-BTEC National Certificate in Business and Finance; the Certificate in Housing Association Finance and the BTEC HNC in Public Administration, although the last enrolments for this course were in March 1991.

National Vocational Qualifications will have an impact on all these examinations over the next few years as the emphasis turns towards assessment of competences. The Unit is designing a qualification to replace the HNC which will not only meet the needs of students and employers, but will take account of NVQs.

The police promotion examinations have undergone a radical change with the introduction of the Objective Structured Performance Related Examinations (OSPRE). Candidates for the qualifying examination for promotion to the rank of sergeant and inspector face a two part exam, with the second part consisting of a series of practical tests.

Employment Surveys and Research Unit carries out a number of in-depth studies, both to inform the internal work of the Board, and also as a much valued service to local authorities.

Its work makes it the recognised source of local authority targeted information on the labour market, pay intelligence and relevant economic indicators.

MANAGEMENT PRACTICE AND DEVELOPMENT DIRECTORATE (LGMB)

Director: Richard Waterhouse

Although this Directorate is divided into management practice and management development, their work is an integrated whole. The Directorate identifies major areas of current management change which will impact on, and demand improvement in, management practice. Most of the continuing areas of work transferred to the Board from LAMSAC are located within this Directorate.

The aim of the Directorate is to raise awareness and debate of key issues and their likely impact on the management of the local authority; to provide advice on the implication of changes in management practice, and to develop the performance and capacity of the authority to manage change.

The areas under management practice include environment, education reform, community care, political processes, organisational design and practice, and strategic management.

Management development includes work on the implications of management change, corporate management development and management standards, assessment and qualifications.

SALARIES AND WAGES IN LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The figures are the latest available at the time of going to press. The date shown for each category is that from which the rates quoted came into operation. For certain categories of local government employees separate rates apply respectively in England and Wales and in Scotland; where no distinction is made in the following tables, common standards apply. For reasons of space, particulars are given only of the major groups. The Editor acknowledges the assistance of LGMB staff, CoSLA, local authority staffs and trade union officials in supplying information.

NOTE: Information regarding new national agreements reached subsequent to the printing of this Section are, where possible, included in Section 35.

JOINT NEGOTIATING COMMITTEE FOR CHIEF EXECUTIVES OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Revised National Agreement from 1 July 1991

Local authorities shall determine the salary scale for the post of chief executive by—

- (a) calculating their population for salary purposes;
 - (b) locating the salary range applicable to that population; and then
 - (c) choosing an appropriate salary from within that range;
- in accordance with the principles set out below.

Calculation of population for salary purposes

For salary purposes the population of a local authority shall be—

- (a) the Registrar General's latest estimates of the static population, plus
- (b) where the local authority so determines, any significant population fluctuations or projections that can be based on published data or statistical analysis, and relating to—
 - (i) a large seasonal influx of visitors, such as arises at holiday resorts and inland spas (for which the average of any one day in the holiday season can be taken into account);
 - (ii) a large influx of day workers;
 - (iii) a projected increase in population where services are geared to, or being developed for, a higher ultimate population.

Total population fluctuations and projections which do not exceed either 50,000 or 15% of the static population shall be disregarded. The total fluctuating and projected population shall be divided by four to give the figure to be added to static population for salary purposes.

Authorities should update their population figures each 1st July. In authorities where this updating of the figures will result in a lower salary scale than the existing one being applicable to the post of Chief Executive, it has been agreed that, so long as he remains in that post, the Chief Executive shall be entitled to retain his existing salary scale and to receive the benefit of any increases to that scale which may thereafter be negotiated within the Joint Negotiating Committee.

Salary ranges

Once the population has been calculated the local authority should then locate the appropriate salary range from the following tables.

In choosing the salary from the range a local authority should not only take account of the authority's population but also:

- (i) assess the overall level of responsibilities taking account of the nature of the problems facing the authority and the form of management organisation adopted;
 - (ii) note that the salary ranges take account of the fact that the job of the chief executive cannot be satisfactorily undertaken within a fixed working week and that some element of unsocial hours will be required for the proper performance of the responsibilities. Where however the circumstances and working arrangement of the authority necessarily commit a chief executive to a significant volume of work in addition to and outside normal office hours the authority should take this into account in determining the inclusive salary from within the appropriate range;
 - (iii) recognise that the salary ranges provided in the tables are intended to apply to all posts of chief executive (who meet the definition contained in paragraph 30 of the agreement) including those who have additional responsibilities or duties arising from special factors, such as responsibilities arising from the discharge of functions under Section 101 of the Local Government Act 1972 or have responsibilities arising from particular local authority undertakings such as municipal airports;
 - (iv) take account of any arrangements for performance related pay that might have been introduced.
- Alternatively if the position of chief officers is also being reviewed, use the job evaluation scheme.

The local authority has discretion to apply a salary scale at any point within the salary range provided that the scale consists of five points (four annual increments) with the maximum of the scale being 10% above the minimum selected for the post but where arrangements for performance related pay are in operation a different pattern of increments may be adopted, the scale can be lengthened or provision made for the payment of a non-consolidated annual cash bonus in addition to basic salary. The maximum of the appropriate range of the following tables is not to be exceeded.

Expenses and allowances

- (i) The Council shall reimburse the Chief Executive his reasonable out of pocket expenses.
- (ii) The salary ranges set out in paragraphs 22-25 relate to the responsibilities carried. They do not take account of non-pay benefits such as the provision of cars, car allowances or other benefits which are matters for local determination.

JOINT NEGOTIATING COMMITTEE FOR CHIEF OFFICERS OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Revised National Agreement from 1 July 1991

Salaries

Local authorities shall determine the salary scales for the posts of chief officers and deputies by—

- (a) calculating their population for salary purposes;
 - (b) locating the salary range applicable to that population; and then
 - (c) choosing an appropriate salary from within or below that range;
- in accordance with the principles set out below.

Calculation of population for salary purposes

For salary purposes the population of a local authority shall be—

- (a) the Registrar General's latest estimates of the static population plus
- (b) where the local authority so determines, any significant population fluctuations or projections that can be based on published data or statistical analysis, and relating to—
 - (i) a large seasonal influx of visitors, such as arises at holiday resorts and inland spas (for which the average of any one day in the holiday season can be taken into account);
 - (ii) a large influx of day workers;
 - (iii) a projected increase in population where services are geared to, or being developed for, a higher ultimate population.

Total population fluctuations and projections which do not exceed either 50,000 or 15% of the static population shall be disregarded. The total fluctuating and projected population shall be divided by four to give the figure to be added to static population for salary purposes.

Salary ranges

Once the population has been calculated the local authority should then locate the appropriate 10% salary range for its senior chief officers from the following table.

The local authority should then establish a salary scale for each chief officer's post within or below the Range having regard to its position in the population group; the duties and responsibilities of each post; the relative position of chief officers in the management structure of the authority; and bearing in mind the need for a reasonable relationship between the salaries of chief officers on the one hand and subordinate staff and the chief executive of the authority on the other. The authority should also take account of any arrangements for performance related pay that might have been introduced.

It should also be noted that the salary ranges take account of the fact that the job of the chief officer cannot be satisfactorily undertaken within a fixed working week and that some element of unsocial hours will be required for the proper performance of the responsibilities. Where however the circumstances and working arrangement of the authority necessarily commit a chief officer to a significant volume of work in addition to and outside normal office hours the authority should take this into account in determining the inclusive salary from within or below the appropriate range.

The local authority has discretion to apply a salary scale at any point within or below the salary range provided that the factors mentioned above have been taken into account. Normally they should adopt a scale consisting of five points (four annual increments) with the maximum of the scale being 10% above the minimum selected for the post but where arrangements for performance related pay are in operation a different pattern of increments may be adopted. The maximum of the appropriate Range of the tables is not to be exceeded.

Subject to the protection of existing officers, local authorities have discretion from 1 October 1984 to fix the pay of posts of deputy chief officer either (a) as a percentage of the salary of the appropriate chief officer (in which case the percentage should be between 70% and 80%); or (b) on any other scale that can be justified following an assessment or evaluation of the responsibilities involved (provided that the salary is not less than the equivalent of 70% of the chief officer).

Minimum population (marked *) for determination of spinal columns calculator: District Councils—50,000; Islands Councils—80,000; Regional Councils—180,000.

2. Spinal Column Calculator

(a) The authority shall determine its spinal column calculator by reference to Appendix "A" to the Scheme. To do this, the next higher figure to the authority's adjusted population is found in the appropriate column—column 3 for district councils and column 4 for regional and islands councils—and the corresponding spinal column point number is read off from column 1. This spinal column point is the authority's "spinal column calculator", hereinafter referred to as "the calculator".

(b) Where the authority's adjusted population falls below the minimum figure shown in Appendix "A"—50,000 for district councils, 80,000 for islands councils and 180,000 for regional councils—then the minimum figure shall be used to determine the calculator.

The calculator is then used to determine salary scales on the basis set out below.

3. Chief Executives

The minimum of the salary scale for a chief executive, in relation to the authority's calculator point, shall be in accordance with the following table—

	Authority's Calculator Point	Relationship
Regional Councils—
Up to and including spinal column point 22		C+12 to C+24
Spinal column point 23 to 28		C+15 to C+27
Spinal column point 29 to 32		C+16 to C+28
Spinal column 33 and above		C+18 to C+30
Islands Councils
All		C+12 to C+24
District Councils
Up to and including spinal column point 14		C+10 to C+22
Spinal column point 15 or 16		C+11 to C+23
Spinal column point 17 to 22		C+12 to C+24
Spinal column point 23 to 26		C+14 to C+26
Spinal column point 27 and above		C+15 to C+27

4. Other Chief Officials

The maximum of the salary scale which shall consist of four consecutive spinal column points, for chief officials, other than the chief executive, of regional, islands and district councils shall not exceed the maximum relationship to the authority's calculator point set out in the following table:—

	Authority's Calculator Point	Relationship
Regional Councils—
Up to and including spinal column point 22		C+17
Spinal column point 23 to 32		C+18
Spinal column point 33 and above		C+20
Islands Councils
All		C+17
District Councils
Up to and including spinal column point 16		C+17
Spinal column point 17 to 19		C+18
Spinal column point 20 to 22		C+19
Spinal column point 23 and above		C+20

The determination of the minimum of each chief official's salary scale, subject to the prescribed maximum relationship set out above, shall be at the discretion of the authority taking into account relative levels of responsibility and any special factors affecting a particular post.

5. Deputies to Chief Executives and Chief Officials

Deputies to Chief Executives and Chief Officials, whether or not they are sole or senior, shall have salary scales which consist of four successive spinal column points, determined at the discretion of the authority.

INSTITUTE OF MANAGEMENT SERVICES

Director: Allen Brobyn, 1 Cecil Ct., London Rd., Enfield, Middx., EN2 6DD (081-363 7452).

The Institute of Management Services (IMS) has 10,000 members and is one of the major professional bodies concerned with productivity and quality.

The Institute is the professional and qualifying body for people employed in management services and represents those who are employed within industry, commerce, the armed services and the public sector.

The principal objectives of the Institute are to create professional standards for the practice of management services. It encourages research and development and collaborates with professional associations in similar fields, as well as providing a system of qualifying examinations for its members.

Membership can be in either of two divisions: corporate and non-corporate. Corporate members are full members who are entitled to vote at general meetings and to use designatory letters after their name—MMS for a Member, FMS for a Fellow. The non-Corporate grades are Affiliate and Associate, the latter giving designatory letters of AMS.

Corporate membership may be achieved by examination gained or alternatively, by interview for graduates and other highly qualified and experienced men and women. Colleges throughout the country run courses for the Institute's examination—the Management Services Certificate, which covers work study in conjunction with organisation and methods or organisation and methods in conjunction with systems, and the Management Services Diploma. Study can also be done privately or by distance learning.

The Institute has its own journal, Management Services, which is issued free to members each month and which is also available, on subscription, to non-members of the Institute. There is a wide range of services for members, including an extensive library and technical information service. There are also a number of specialist groups, among them a 2,535 member strong local government and water services group.

PART I—TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

ROYAL TOWN PLANNING INSTITUTE

28 Portland Pl., London, W1N 4BE (071-536 3107).

Founded in 1914 as a completely independent body, the Royal Town Planning Institute represents the town planning profession in Britain. Its first Presidents were Thomas Adams, a leading figure in the garden city movement, and Sir Raymond Unwin, the architect and town planner.

Its object is 'to advance the science and art of town planning in all its aspects, including local, regional and national planning, for the benefit of the public'.

Extending knowledge of planning and ensuring that its members meet high standards of competence and integrity are basic aims and the professional training of town planners is therefore a high priority. The R.T.P.I. conducts examinations, encourages universities and other higher education institutions to develop syllabuses of planning, arranges meetings and conferences, provides bibliographic information and library services, publishes a journal and other publications and administers a Code of Professional Conduct.

Meetings are held at the Portland Place headquarters in London and in the provinces, and some are held jointly with other professional bodies. The Annual Conference open to non-members and the Town and Country Planning Summer School is held at a British university each September and sponsored by the R.T.P.I.

The library of reference books and periodicals is housed in Portland Place, 34, adjoining to the library; members can also use the excellent library of the Department of the Environment.

PART II—ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

THE ECONOMIC PLANNING MACHINERY

CO-ORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT ACTIVITIES IN THE REGIONS

1. For many administrative purposes England is divided into eight regions—Northern, Yorkshire and Humberside, East Midlands, Eastern, South East, South West, West Midlands and North West. There is a Regional Board for each region consisting of civil servants who are normally the senior representatives in the regional offices of Government Departments. The Chairmen of the Boards are the Regional Directors of the Departments of the Environment and Transport.
2. The main tasks of the Boards is to provide for the co-ordination of inter-Departmental activities at the Regional level. Advisory contacts are maintained by such means as ad hoc meetings with standing conferences of local authorities and by annual meetings with the regional councils of the TUC and CBI. The Boards also provide a forum for inter-departmental consultations on strategic guidance and other issues of common concern.
3. In Scotland there is a Scottish Economic Council chaired by the Secretary of State for Scotland which provides a forum for discussion of all aspects of Scottish economic development. Members are appointed by the Secretary of State in a personal capacity.
4. In Wales there is a Welsh Economic Planning Board under the Chairmanship of an Under Secretary of the Welsh Office.
5. The Northern Ireland Economic Council, established by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, provides the Government with advice on regional economic policy. It is composed of representatives of the trade unions, employers' organisations and independent persons. The Chairman and representatives are appointed by the Secretary of State.

CITY ACTION TEAMS

1. City Action Teams operate in Birmingham, Cleveland, Leeds-Bradford, Liverpool, London, Manchester-Salford, Newcastle-Gateshead and Nottingham.
2. The teams consist of the Regional Directors of the Departments of Trade and Industry, Environment, and Employment, including the Training, Enterprise and Employment Directorate. Leadership is shared among the Departments. The Minister for Local Government and the Inner Cities has special responsibility for co-ordinating inner city policy. Sponsor Ministers were appointed in 1989 to take a particular interest in each Team's work.
3. The CATs' aim to co-ordinate the range of Government programmes dealing with the severe problems of economic change and unemployment in inner cities. One of their main roles is to encourage partnership and the development of projects and initiatives jointly between departments and the private sector, local authorities and others. Their work is directed towards the objectives of the Government's Action for Cities initiative:
 - the creation of jobs
 - training for employment
 - the encouragement of enterprise
 - environmental improvements.
4. The CATs receive a special budget totalling £8.2m in 1991/92 to help them co-ordinate action designed to address local problems.

POLICING—IMPROVING THE QUALITY OF SERVICE

A Review by Michael Hirst, QPM, BA Chief Constable of Leicestershire

The debate of the 1990s in the public sector, as evidenced by the Prime Minister's speech at the Conservative Central Council Meeting on 23rd March 1990, is in response to mounting public concern about standards of service—standards of service in the National Health Service, education, public transport and, as shown by the British Crime Survey, standards of service in Police service delivery. Consumerism, public expectation and ultimately public satisfaction rather than the cost effectiveness of the 80s will be the beginning and end of any debate on public sector services in the 90s. The Prime Minister has already promised a people's charter to guarantee standards in public services.

The concept of the contract between service provider and user, the agreement to negotiate standards of service delivery at local level and the consensus about priorities seem to be better mechanisms for determining quality and satisfaction than regulation, bureaucratic control and centralized administration.

In October 1990 the Police Service put itself ahead of the field when, in the presence of the then Home Secretary, the Rt. Hon. David Waddington, the Service pledged itself to identifying and setting the bench marks of public satisfaction and measuring over time the improvement or otherwise in the service we provide.

For the reasons behind this initiative we need to go back some 12 months, and remind ourselves of the criticism the Service was receiving from the press. At that time it was felt by experienced officers of all ranks that the virulence and sustained criticism was not simply the consequence of some inexcusable operational own goals. Further, there were those who felt that had the editors not been fairly sure of public support for their attack, they would not have sustained it. There was a feeling in the mind of many that at that time we were moving towards a crisis of confidence in policing. But more importantly there was a determination in the Service to do something about it. The burning question was why were we losing public confidence when many would argue, that the modern Police Service is more effective, more efficient and more technically advanced than at any time in its history.

Whilst Skogan's British Crime Survey analysis has subsequently provided the hard evidence about the effects of what was going wrong in terms of public dissatisfaction, the immediate clue to the cause was to be found in the Operational Policing Review, a series of opinion surveys of both police and the public, published in February 1990, during the height of the criticism of the Service.

The OPR was intended, amongst other things, to seek police and public opinion on the preferred style of policing and on policing priorities. In addition it was an exercise to demonstrate that financial constraints were influencing policing style.

But the OPR actually went much further than that. It did provide some evidence of the public's preferred style of policing, but more importantly it provided evidence of a lack of compatibility, between what policemen on the street saw as their role in the community and what the community itself identified as the role of the police. In addition, it highlighted the difference in importance placed on style of policing, in this instance what was referred to as community policing, by senior managers and officers on the ground.

I would summarise these very significant aspects of the OPR as the absence of a shared expectation between service deliverers and their customers and to add a further complexity, the absence of a shared mission between police managers and the work force. What was left unsaid was that in the absence of a shared mission, the Service cannot develop that vitally important platform of shared ethical values on which to build the professional standards of the Service.

Ironically, whilst this took the Service somewhat by surprise, it could have been anticipated, when only months before Wolff Olins, in their report on the Metropolitan Police, had said:

"The employees do not share a common sense of purpose. There is no consistency of views on the overall mission of the organizations, nor how each individual contributes to the whole. The organization is uncertain of its role which manifests itself in a wide divergence of views on what is proper police work. Is it crime detection or crime prevention, or are police officers social workers in uniform?"

WOLFF OLINS 1990

The national press, the OPR, the British Crime Survey, and in relation to the Met., Wolff Olins, were all saying the same thing—in essence we had no shared concept of policing or policing priorities, we were failing to deliver the type and quality of service expected by the public to a greater or lesser degree, and the members of the organization were confused about their role and the mission of the organization.

We could spend a great deal of time debating what caused that situation to have developed, and determine a list of scapegoats, economic and social pressures, and changes in society which brought it about. That really is not the issue. Neither, I would argue, was the real issue raised by the findings of the OPR about resources. What the OPR identified was a problem of Police leadership which I will address later. For the time being I would like to stay with the OPR because, in addition to identifying a problem, it also offered the Service some convenient escape clauses in its conclusions, about which I have some unease.

The OPR drew four conclusions from the research; that the public preferred the traditional style of policing; that financial constraint is changing the style of policing; that the focus on the measurable effectiveness aspects of policing is causing remainder to be neglected; and finally that officers are losing their vision of service as a result of pressure of work.

Unfortunately the OPR offered no precise definition of "traditional policing". If we are talking about what took place some 30, 20 or even 15 years ago, then I believe that the detail would be outside the frame of experience of many of the people interviewed. Further, policing style differed significantly between urban and rural areas and, having served through it, I know that there were aspects that the Federation would not tolerate today, not to mention the public and the courts.

But in fairness, it has to be said that, whatever its faults, the public found it acceptable in that they did not challenge it, and that I believe is the key. The style of policing has to be acceptable to the public and meet their expectation in terms of credibility and quality which is quite different to saying we have to go back to some imprecise concept of "traditional policing".

Our problem today is that a more discerning and demanding public are questioning the style of policing demanding higher standards of police behaviour, and insisting on a louder voice in the determination of policing priorities. This is less a criticism of the police than a reflection of change in society. What could develop into a criticism is our failure to respond to those demands for change.

My second concern about the OPR is that I cannot accept that financial stringency is the sole or indeed the most important determinant of policing style.

Police leaders, the Staff Associations, Police Authorities and the Constable himself to a large extent will determine policing style. The level of investment might influence the spectrum or scope of policing but not necessarily the style. Style is to do with the culture and values of the organization, how we, the Service, see ourselves, and how we decide to respond to the needs of the community we serve. The greatest influence on style of policing will be, in the final analysis, police leadership. However, it requires those leaders to have a vision and an understanding of what that style should be and an ability to articulate it in such a way that those officers on the street identify with it and indeed demand to be part of it.

Neither do I accept the OPR conclusion, that the deterioration in the unquantifiable aspects of policing was simply as a result of the focus on the measurable aspects of police work.

The deterioration in the so-called unquantifiable aspects of policing has occurred, purely and simply because we, the Service, have not taken the trouble to quantify them and we, as much as anyone, have concentrated on the so-called measurable aspects as an easier option. Even today, you only have to examine the latest Force command and control systems which are currently being analysed by the Home Office/Treasury Working Party, and note the amount of activity analysis space devoted to crime response, as opposed to community policing activity to see what we regard as the most important, almost the exclusive, aspect of police work. I would suggest that how an organization measures what it does, to some extent reflects the way the organization sees itself, and any analysis of the measurement of enforcement policing, as compared to the service dimension of policing, will tell us a great deal about the Service and the image it has of itself. Inevitably the officers on the ground respond to what they believe the Service sees as its important function.

And yet in 1986 research showed that 80% of police work was what Chief Superintendent Hart described as service orientated and only 20% as regulatory.

Finally, I do not accept that individual officers reduction in the vision of service as a necessary component of their task is simply as a result of the pressure to cope with increased demand.

This assumes that every officer should have his own vision of service. I would argue that if, as Hart suggested, "service" is 80% of our function, then it is one of the fundamental tasks of leadership to provide that vision of service and never more so than when the organization is under pressure or losing its direction. And yet the discrepancy in the OPR between what managers saw as the value of community policing and what constables thought of it, suggests this has not been happening.

In "Leaders", The Strategies for Taking Charge" Bennis and Nanus identify vision as the central concept of the theory of leadership. "To choose a direction a leader must first have developed a mental image of a possible and desirable future state of the organization." It may be that we, the leaders and not the officers on the ground, have lost that essential vision of the service dimension of policing. Is there any wonder that those who look to us for that vision are in turn losing their direction and are confused?

I did not accept, therefore, the overriding thesis of the OPR that resources were the key to the problems identified in the review. The solution was infinitely more complex, and we attempted to define that solution in the strategic policy statement on "Meeting Community Expectation".

The Strategic Policy on Quality of Service Delivery attempted to bridge the gap between service delivery and public expectation, by giving a new message to the public, that we were corporately conscious of their needs, and that we, as a Service, were committing ourselves not only to identifying those needs at national and local level, but that we were prepared to adjust the style of policing, its values and its standards, to meet public expectation. Equally importantly we committed ourselves to monitoring and publishing our success or otherwise over time. We, in a sense, agreed to stop assessing police effectiveness solely by our own in house statistical criteria but instead to be conscious of and work towards achieving the public's expectation of service delivery.

The challenge now is to translate our intentions into measurable action at street level. This does not simply mean conducting cosmetic public opinion surveys and hoping the results come out supportive. It means changing the ethos of policing, its values and standards from regulation and enforcement to service, protection and reassurance. We must get home the message that regulation and enforcement is not an end in itself but simply a means to an end, and that will be no simple task.

The first measure of the success of the initiative was, in my view, the acceptance by the Staff Association of the definition of the problem, and the acceptance of the suggested solution. The second was the support of the Home Office and the Home Secretary's response. I am assured that the initiative is seen to be as important by the present Home Secretary as by his predecessor. The third was the press reception it received following the Seminar at Bramshill on 23 October 1990. The fourth was that the AMA and the ACC, sensing the importance of the issue, not only resented not being part of the determination of the strategy but insisted on being involved in all further discussions. Michael Day of the CRE stated publicly that we had taken a great step forward in reassuring the minority communities whose interests the Commission represents.

In conceptual terms we appear to have identified the problem, perhaps even to have identified part of the strategy of the solution. That was the easy part. What Police leaders have to do now is bring about the changes in the police thinking, values and standards which will ensure we meet community expectation and the commitment we have made regardless of current criticism in the knowledge that we are on the right road and that the Service can only benefit in the longer term. This principle of meeting community expect-tation must become as much a part of every day police thinking as crime recording and "999" response. If it is seen as something cosmetic or peripheral to mainstream policing, it will fail but more critically public confidence in the police will fail.

AMA: Association of Metropolitan Authorities

ACC: Association of County Councils

CRC: Commission for Racial Equality

At national level progress has been steady and sound. At the launch of the seminar, 8 working parties reported on their deliberations and made recommendations in respect of the way forward. This work has been analysed by the policy review team, at the ACPO central office, and recommendations have been made. These will be placed high on the agenda of the newly formed Joint Working Party set up to co-ordinate response at national level. The Working Party includes representatives from the Staff Associations, the AMA, the ACC, the Staff College, the Home Office and the Inspectorate.

Incidentally the Home Office commitment to this initiative has never wavered and in addition to the time and effort individual members have invested, they have initiated a quarterly public opinion survey on public satisfaction which has already been trialled. The questions being asked of the public are intended to capture positive as well as negative observations on police service delivery for analysis purposes. In addition, they have instigated a carousel course at Bramshill and are looking at ways to introduce the principles of quality improvement into recruit training.

Perhaps the greatest progress in support of this initiative has been made by HM Inspectorate of Constabulary. Their draft proposals are intended to measure the Police Service's response to the initiative and to take on board all of the issues in the strategic policy. They will, in the short term, be looking for the Chief Constable's declaration of commitment to the strategy, the identification of the designated Chief Officer, and a review of Force goals to take account of the quality dimension of policing. Staff appraisal systems will be scrutinized to ensure that the skills element of officers' personal development is evaluated. Most importantly, the Inspectorate will be looking for the setting of performance levels in key service areas, as well as ensuring that the Force infrastructure, conveys the same message as that set out by the Chief Constable. Clearly, they will be looking towards the Forces monitoring public satisfaction at local level and determining performance indicators, including surveys of serving officers to provide feedback on changes in the policing culture. They will in essence not simply be checking the superficial acceptance of the policy but for the necessary improvement, where improvement is necessary, in Force service delivery, as identified by public satisfaction.

Work has already begun on performance indicators but I believe that before we determine national benchmarks of service delivery, we should have a much clearer indication of public expectation at local level. This is as much as we can expect to achieve in the first year.

In summary, what we have achieved is a realization that if we were not actually getting it wrong, there is at least some room for improvement in police service delivery and a regular quality audit, as well as, possibly a regular culture audit of the organization, is an essential ingredient in the management of any service organization. Secondly, we have committed ourselves to ensure that the police officers, and the community we serve, share the same expectation of service delivery. Further, we have now formalized quality of service issues within our organization and we recognize that we need new national performance indicators in the fullness of time.

So much for the progress to date. What of the way forward? Like many other organizations, in attempting to tackle the question of improving the quality of service, we find that we have raised another series of questions. The very independence of 42 Forces responding to this initiative, in their own ways, gives a complexity to the process not experienced in other organizations and further emphasizes the need for corporate policy and central co-ordination. It also underlines the key role of the Inspectorate in setting performance indicators and providing comparative measurement across 42 disparate Forces.

But some of the questions being raised, perhaps should have been answered some years ago, and may account for the situation in which we found ourselves last year.

The first question raised under the heading of improvement in quality service delivery is the need for a clear definition of the business we are in—a definition which underpins the work of the patrol officer, the detective, the traffic policeman, the reassurance constable. We could ask 12 constables or even 12 Chief Constables and come up with a dozen statements of what each of us believes the Police Service is in the business of providing and they would all be different. The dilemma is that we only need one—agreed and understood by every Chief Constable, by every constable and rank in between, and by the public. The mission of the organization, which is how a business organization describes the concept, will in turn largely determine the style, the values and the standards of the organization and, in the final analysis, the strategy to achieve our objectives. The major successful private sector organizations know from the ground floor to the Managing Director what their mission is. The QPR suggests that we have no consensus between the ranks of constable and superintendent nor between the public and the police.

The danger of not having a shared mission is fairly obvious. First of all we lose direction within the organization. Policy makers and service deliverers are working to different sets of objectives and priorities. Equally damaging, sub groups develop their own mission which might actually contradict the best interest of the organization. We have all seen the danger of the "firm within the firm" but rarely put this down to the failure of leadership to articulate the mission of the organization and a shared set of organizational standards and values.

But should the mission of the organization be determined nationally or should each independent Force set its own? Is their room in an increasingly corporate national body for 42 different views of the core function of the organization? I think not, not because I do not respect the individuality of separate Forces but because the public have a right to expect the same quality of service throughout the country. Whether we like it or not, we are seen by many as a single national service.

Having determined the mission, we need to address the question of service delivery, the bench marks of performance, which I believe should be the same across the country, again not because I want to deprive Chief Officers of their independence to set their own standards of service but because the public has a right to expect the same level of service from the police in the same way as they expect comparable service standards from other public services, the courts, and national private sector organizations.

In this context there is no salvation in saying my Force is getting it right. We, as a Service, must get it right because inconsistencies or idiosyncrasies in one area reduce credibility of the rest in the eyes of the community. To that end, therefore, we should have a shared understanding of our role and the values which underpin the service delivery. The Strategic Policy Document in setting down the Statement of Common Purpose and Values attempted to set this principle for the first time but this was only the first tentative step.

A further issue which needs addressing is one I have already touched on. We are going to have to define that 80% of police activity which is non regulatory and determine priorities with the community, bench marks for service delivery and performance indicators for measurement.

This area of our work, which is seen by the public as being crucial to the service we provide, cannot simply be regarded as undirected patrol, something the officer does between responding to calls, or referred to as "unquantifiable". Problem solving in the community, acting as the catalyst for multi-agency responses, providing the 24-hour help line to the public must be quantified and must be seen by the officers themselves as an important, if not the most important part of their work—not because I say so—but because the public say this is the service they want. Now, as never before, there is a need to go to the community to determine their policing priorities and balance them against our professional judgment and agree a new set of priorities and levels of service delivery.

Having determined the mission negotiated, the key areas of service delivery and the bench marks of quality, we need national performance indicators, not to deprive the constable on the street of his or her discretion, but to ensure that we, as a Service, are committed to the same corporate mission, standards and quality of service, underpinned by the same values and principles across the country. It will be against this backdrop that Forces exercise their independence and officers exercise their discretion.

The last hurdle we have to cross, I believe, is the internal organizational one. Put simply, I find it difficult to talk about providing a "service" using a military organizational model and everything that implies from hierarchical command structures, through a reward system based only on promotion to the absence of managerial trust. We pay our constables like junior executives and yet provide a sergeant progress chaser for every 4.8 constables and an inspector to supervise every 2.9 sergeants. We insist on sub-divisional commanders liaising with the community but rarely give them the authority to make strategic decisions to meet local public expectation for which they are accountable. In the absence of a corporate mission statement and agreed levels of service delivery, we have to resort to the discipline code which defines minimal performance levels to drive the organization.

We need not only to be more sensitive to the needs of the public and meet their expectations but increasingly I believe police senior management needs to be more sensitive to the needs of the organization. We have to give our middle rank officers the opportunity to develop their potential in the field of service delivery within the policy set by the Force and against the ethos and values of the Service.

Sir John Harvey Jones summarized this organizational concept as "creating an open trusting environment where people are free to use their skills—a community with shared ethos beliefs and feelings collaborating through their own enthusiasm towards a common goal". If we run the police like the marine corps do not be surprised if we produce constables who behave like the marines. Already the ACPO Training and Personnel Working Party on lateral career development has begun to address the question of rewards for skills amongst sergeants and constables. Audit Commission Report 9 on the organization of provincial Police Forces is challenging the hierarchical structure of Police Forces and arguing for a reward system not related to promotion as well as more independent sub-divisional service delivery points. So we are beginning to see change, new ideas are being considered and hopefully the debate is beginning. But we have to be committed to these changes corporately, and not have 42 different Force models, and 3 Staff Association positions.

In summary the quality of service issue goes deeper than officers smiling when they issue tickets, or the Force holding public opinion surveys. It is about a redefinition of the very nature of the concept of police in society, the purpose, the standards, value systems and culture and the type of organizational framework we need to deliver that service, and I have been very careful not to prejudge any of those issues.

And we have a head start. Most organizations would give anything for the pride, dedication and commitment we take for granted amongst our officers on the street. Organizationally, it is beyond price. The preparedness to work all hours, against heavy odds and in increasing danger is evidenced every day of the week in all parts of the country. Where they may have been let down is perhaps the reluctance of managers and leaders in all ranks to harness that commitment and dedication to a common purpose and to articulate that purpose. I believe that police leaders and senior managers, and I include myself, have got to develop a vision of where they want to see the Police Service going, a vision of the Service in the 90s. We have spent so long looking over our shoulders that we have lost our direction. I believe that the quality of service issue in the broadest sense gives us the chance to get back on the right path again.

The question I have not answered is whether the strategy is the right one. All I can do is to turn to an international authority.

"In the final analysis the non-profit organization, whether it is in health care or education or community service (or policing) has to judge itself by its performance in creating vision, standards, values and commitment and in creating human competence. The non-profit organization therefore needs constantly to raise these goals—or its performance will go down."

Managing the Non-Profit Organization
Peter F Drucker 1990

I believe we are on the right road.

PROBATION SERVICE

ENGLAND AND WALES

The Probation Service in England and Wales, which is divided into 55 probation areas, consists of probation officers and various supporting staff who are employed by probation committees. These are composed of magistrates and co-opted members with legal and specialist interests. In outer London and the metropolitan counties members of borough and district councils are also co-opted to the probation committees. The Criminal Justice Act 1988 enables regulations to be made which would require probation committees in shire counties as well to co-opt members of local authorities. Whilst the committees are bodies corporate independent of central and local government, the Home Secretary is responsible to Parliament for the work of the Probation Service in general and is assisted in this function by the Probation Service Division of the Home Office and HM Probation Inspectorate. Furthermore, four fifths of expenditure incurred by probation committees is provided by the Home Office, by way of specific grant to local authorities, who provide the remainder.

The duties, powers and functions of the Probation Service are established by statute—principally the Powers of Criminal Courts Act 1973 as amended by the Criminal Law Act 1977 and the Criminal Justice Acts 1982 and 1988. This statutory framework is complemented by the Probation Rules 1984 (as amended). Included in these are Rules regulating the powers and duties of the probation committees and the general duty of the chief probation officer in each area. The latter provides that 'a chief probation officer shall be responsible for the direction of the service in his area, for its effective operation and the efficient use of resources'.

ASSOCIATION OF CHIEF OFFICERS OF PROBATION

The members of ACOP are the Chief, Deputy Chief and Assistant Chief Probation Officers responsible for the management of the probation services. The membership of ACOP numbers about 300. Its objects are to provide a forum to enable the members to examine issues arising from the management responsibilities arising from their respective offices, to consult with and be consulted by other organisations or individuals on matters of concern to probation services and to represent the corporate views of members, and to promote the work of probation services. These objects are pursued through a national and regional network of committees which cover all aspects of the work of the Probation Service.

SCOTLAND

The social work department in each of the 9 regional and 3 islands authorities in Scotland is responsible for carrying out the duty of the local authority to promote social welfare by making available advice, guidance and assistance on such a scale as may be appropriate, services to offenders being a part of the whole. From 1 April 1991, all approved expenditure defrayed by local authorities in providing probation, court services, parole and aspects of throughcare will be reimbursed 100 per cent by Central Government. National Objectives and Standards in respect of these services have been issued and local authorities have been advised that full implementation of the Standards should be achieved by 1 April 1992. Local authorities will continue to manage, run and develop the services in collaboration with the Scottish Office and in accord with the National Standards.

Part III of the 1968 Act made provision for the setting up of a system of children's hearings in place of juvenile courts; local authority social work departments are responsible for providing reports on children who appear before hearings, and for supervising the children for whom compulsory measures of care are considered necessary.

The local authority social work department, other than when dealing with those offender services mentioned above, are financed by the local authorities, whose income is derived from a rate support grant from Central Government and from Community charges paid by residents and from rates paid by industry in each local authority area.

REVIEW OF THE COAL INDUSTRY 1989/90

British Coal made an operating profit of £133 million in 1989/90, a reduction of £365 million compared with the previous year. This resulted in a loss after interest charges of £441 million, compared with a profit of £66 million in 1988/89. In addition, there were exceptional items which included an asset write down, concessionary coal provision and provisions related to colliery closures and redundancies which amounted to a further £4,635 million giving an overall loss of £5,076 million. This did not therefore reflect a realistic measure of British Coal's level of performance. Government grants accruing in 1989/90 were £7,243 million.

British Coal sales for 1989/90 at 94.3 million tonnes were 4.2 million tonnes lower than the previous year. The fall was largely accounted for by closures of coking coal capacity, the effects of yet another mild winter and a dispute with the SSEB. The key event for the year was the conclusion of negotiations with the new generating companies, National Power and Powergen, for coal supply contracts.

For the fifth successive year deep-mined productivity increased and records were broken. Overall productivity improved by 4.3% and face productivity by 7.7%. Output per manshift of 4.32 tonnes overall and 20.52 tonnes face were industry records. Total colliery output was 75.6 million tonnes, 9.4 million tonnes less than in 1988/89. There were 73 operating collieries at the end of 1989/90, 13 fewer than at the end of March for the previous year. Four collieries were merged into two single units and 11 collieries ceased production, representing a reduction in annual capacity of six million tonnes. Severe geological conditions and face replacement delays accounted for the remainder of the decrease. Opencast output in England, Wales and Scotland was 17.5 million tonnes in 1989/90, some 0.7 million tonnes higher than in the previous year. Opencast sales were 16.9 million tonnes with an operating profit of £233.9 million (£13.34 per tonne).

British Coal employees at the end of March 1990 totalled 85,010, a reduction of 20,035 for the year. The number of industrial employees fell by 17,470 to 73,450 and non-industrial staff fell by 2,565 to 11,560.

There was again a decrease in the total rate of accidents in 1989/90 to 27.10 per 100,000 manshifts worked reflecting the efforts made by management, unions and employees throughout British Coal. Despite these efforts the total of 18 fatalities during the year was the same as for 1988/89.

SAFETY IN MINES RESEARCH ESTABLISHMENT—SEE HEALTH AND SAFETY COMMISSION—SECTION 46

REVIEW OF THE ELECTRICITY SUPPLY INDUSTRY IN BRITAIN

In 1990, the electricity supply industry in Britain underwent a large organisational change with the implementation of the Government's privatisation proposals under the Electricity Act 1989.

Under the new legislation, twelve new public electricity supply companies (regional electricity companies) have been formed from the twelve Area Boards in England and Wales. The companies are responsible for maintaining and operating their local distribution networks to their tariff customers.

Four new companies have been formed from the Central Electricity Generating Board (CEGB), including three new generating companies. National Power plc and PowerGen plc operate the fossil fuel-fired stations and hydro-electric stations previously owned by the CEGB.

The fourth company to be formed from the CEGB is The National Grid Company plc. It is responsible for operating the transmission system, and for co-ordinating the operation of power stations connected to it. The company also operates the pumped-storage stations at Dinorwig and Ffestiniog, the cross-channel link with France, and the interconnection with the Scottish Power system.

In Scotland, privatisation has resulted in the formation of three new companies. Scottish Power plc, formed from the South of Scotland Electricity Board, and Scottish Hydro-Electric are vertically integrated companies carrying out the generation, transmission, distribution and supply of electricity within their areas. Scottish Nuclear Ltd is responsible for operating the two Scottish nuclear stations at Hunterston and Torness previously owned by the South of Scotland Electricity Board and will remain in the public sector.

In Northern Ireland, electricity supply is carried out by a public corporation, Northern Ireland Electricity. The Government has announced its intention to privatise the industry in Northern Ireland.

A new Association, the Electricity Association, has been created by the newly formed British electricity companies. The Association provides a forum for members to discuss matters of common interest, provides a collective voice for the industry when needed, and provides specialist research and professional services for member companies. Its trading arm is Electricity Association Services Ltd. Research and Development is carried out by its subsidiary company Electricity Association Technology Ltd, Capenhurst, Chester.

PUBLIC RELATIONS IN LOCAL GOVERNMENT

A review by the Local Government Group of the Institute of Public Relations

Each local authority—approaches public relations in a different way and with varying levels of commitment. The number of professional public relations staff employed can therefore range from 1 to 30, while the amount of money spent on public relations activities can be next to nothing to £1 million or more per annum.

The Institute of Public Relations defines public relations practice as follows: "the planned and sustained effort to establish and maintain goodwill and mutual understanding between an organization and its publics". In practice, this translates into various forms to suit the particular needs or priorities of individual councils. The increasing sophistication of communication techniques requires a considered professional approach if a local authority is to be effective. At least seven basic approaches can be found in local government.

1. Some local authorities perceive their public relations function solely in terms of dealing with the media and have no formal policy for other public relations activities.
2. Public relations is sometimes restricted to the handling of enquiries from the public and processing public complaints.
3. Some authorities limit themselves to the distribution of information.
4. Public relations is seen as simply a means of securing publicity and public attention in order to promote the availability of services, tourism, entertainments, etc.
5. Modern technology and the increase in the complexity and diversity of both information and communication techniques has necessitated special skills to manage the dissemination of information to the public en masse—whether it be via the new media, printed matter, visual aids or promotional campaigns.
6. The 'Campaign and Promotion' approach to public relations entails the active marketing of information to target groups, be it individuals, the public at large or decision makers at Westminster, Whitehall or Brussels. It gives emphasis to influencing public opinion, projecting a favourable image and lobbying for support.
7. The 'Corporate Affairs' approach incorporates all those mentioned above and brings them together with more conventional marketing activities. Most local authorities do not have "sales departments", yet they have a wide range of marketing and selling needs, and opportunities including their own advertising media, i.e. poster sites.

There is a need for the social marketing of services such as fostering and welfare benefits, as well as the commercial marketing of facilities such as sports centres and events, country parks, cultural promotions and industrial development opportunities. Corporate marketing embraces not only these, but also the promotion of local government as a responsible, caring entity so that it secures public acceptance and support for its role in society. The corporate marketing approach gives an opportunity for integrating and coordinating all promotional efforts e.g. advertising publicity with editorial publicity—and for maximising the promotional value of departmental projects.

Marketing resources are concerned primarily with the complex task of assessing market needs and anticipations and working with all others involved in shaping and presenting the company's products so that they satisfy estimated demands, at an acceptable price both for the manufacturer and the purchaser.

A plethora of titles has arisen in recent years to describe the public relations function within local government. Marketing is now featuring strongly but has not superseded the traditional public relations role. The responsibilities have become wider. To some extent, this reflects the rapidly changing role of the local authority as an enabler, and not simply as a provider, of services.

Whilst the dissemination of information continues to be an essential part of public relations, there is now increased emphasis on creating a demand in areas such as Leisure Services, Tourism, Industrial Development, Education and Social Services. Competitive tendering and DSOs with their semi-trading activities, have added yet another dimension.

Customer care programmes developed in the private sector, are being adopted in the public sector in response to the sophisticated expectations of the consumer in the 1990s. As a result, reception, information and telephone services are being transformed to provide more ready access. This must be linked to good internal communications. These are integral to an overall marketing and public relations programme.

Now more than ever, it is necessary to balance the interest of the many customers served by a local authority. Revenue and other resources have a direct impact on the levels of service. Marketing skills and research techniques to measure the performance of the multi-dimension service and to identify needs, are being used by many authorities to assist with the decision-making on local issues.

The basic objectives of the public relations function in local government can be summarised as follows:

To establish, maintain and project to the public the authority's corporate character and identity.

To create public understanding of the policies, procedures and activities of the authority by keeping the public as fully informed as possible of those policies, procedures and activities.

To respond, where appropriate, to criticism of the authority.

To encourage public participation in an authority's decision and policy-making processes.

To establish and maintain effective channels of internal communication in order to sustain an awareness and understanding of the local authority's policies, services and staff activities. This should set out to achieve a greater staff commitment and to encourage and enable staff to be good ambassadors for the authority.

To develop the various channels of public communications available to the authority in the furtherance of its objectives and the promotion of its services, and to innovate public communication techniques.

To create and maintain within the authority an awareness of the need to communicate with the public, with its community precept payers and customers and other groups; or to advise on the communication implications of the authority's activities and to contribute towards a sustained responsiveness to public needs and opinions.

Generally, to manage the authority's overall public relations function, to advise on the public relations implications of the policies and activities of the authority and on the formulation of public relations policies.

THE INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC-RELATIONS

Old Trading Hse., 15 Northburgh St., London, EC1V 0PR (071-253 5151).

Director: J. B. Lavelle.

President: R. Haywood, FIPR.

The Institute of Public Relations is the only organisation in the United Kingdom devoted exclusively to the study and development of all aspects of public relations. It was founded in 1948 by a group of public relations officers from commerce, industry, central and local government, all of whom felt the need for an organisation to represent the rapidly expanding profession in which they were engaged.

The Institute is by far the largest professional public relations organisation in Europe. It is a member of the European Confederation of Public Relations (CERP), a federation of Europe's 15 national public relations associations, maintains a regular and active connection with many other overseas public relations associations, and draws associated members from over 40 countries.

The Institute defines public relations practice as "the planned and sustained effort to establish and maintain goodwill and mutual understanding between an organisation and its publics".

The main objectives of the Institute are:

- (a) To promote the development, recognition and understanding of public relations.
- (b) To establish and prescribe standards of professional and ethical conduct and ensure the observance of such standards.
- (c) To encourage the attainment of professional academic qualifications.
- (d) To provide via meetings, conferences, seminars and printed material, information, discussion and comment on all aspects of the practice of public relations.
- (e) To maintain two-way contact between the public relations profession in the UK and public relations practitioners throughout the world.

Within the Institute there is an active Local Government Group, City & Financial Group, Consultants' Group, Government Affairs Group as well as eleven area groups and nine special interest groups.

LOCAL OMBUDSMEN

Three Commissions for Local Administration have been established to investigate complaints from members of the public about injustice caused by maladministration in local government. One for England and one for Wales under the Local Government Act 1974, and one for Scotland under the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1975. Separate notes appear below for each of these three bodies.

Maladministration is not defined in the Acts and will be for Local Commissioners to decide whether it has occurred. But it refers for example to the way in which an authority's decision has been taken. Maladministration may be taken to cover administrative action (or inaction) based on or influenced by improper considerations or conduct. Arbitrariness, malice or bias, including unfair discrimination, are examples of improper considerations. Neglect, unjustifiable delay, incompetence, failure to observe relevant rules or procedures, failure to take relevant considerations into account, failure to establish or review procedures where there is a duty or obligation on a body to do so or the use of faulty systems are examples of improper conduct. The Commissioner has no power to question the merits of a decision taken without maladministration.

A Local Commissioner may accept complaints against the following:

- a. any county council;
- b. any district, borough or city council;
- c. the Inner London Education Authority (matters arising before 1 April 1990);
- d. any London borough council;
- e. the Common Council of the City of London;
- f. the Council of the Isles of Scilly;
- g. any joint board of local authorities, including the National Park boards;
- h. any regional water authority (matters arising before 31 August 1989);
- i. any police authority, other than the Home Secretary (who is the police authority for the Metropolis);
- j. fire authorities;
- k. housing action trusts;
- l. Norfolk and Suffolk Broads Authority;
- m. National Rivers Authority (flood defence and land drainage matters only).

This list has been extended by the Local Government Act 1988 to include the Commission for the New Towns, new town development corporations (housing matters only), the Development Board for Rural Wales, urban development corporations (town and country planning matters only), and, in Scotland, licensing boards.

Parish councils are not open to investigation by a Local Commissioner, unless they are acting as agents for other local authorities.

The Local Commissioner will not investigate any complaint until it has been brought to the attention of the authority complained against, either by the person aggrieved (or his personal representative) or by a member of the authority on behalf of that person, and until the authority has had a reasonable time in which to reply to the complaint.

Complaints alleging maladministration may now be made, in writing, directly to a Local Commissioner.

A complaint may be made by an individual, or by any body of persons (excluding a local authority, nationalised industry or other public body). Normally the complaint must be made by the person who claims to have suffered personal injustice, though exceptions may be made if that person has died or is for any reason unable to act for himself or herself.

Complaints must normally be made to the Local Commissioner or a member within TWELVE MONTHS of the day when the matters complained of came to the notice of the aggrieved person, but a Local Commissioner has power to accept a complaint outside this time-limit if he considers that it is reasonable so to do.

COMMISSION FOR LOCAL ADMINISTRATION IN ENGLAND

Two Commissions for Local Administration—one for England and one for Wales—were established under the Local Government Act 1974 to investigate complaints from members of the public about injustice caused by maladministration in local government. The English Commission at present consists of three Local Commissioners, each of whom will investigate complaints arising in a particular area of the country, and the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

The names of the Local Commissioners and the local government areas for which they are responsible are:

PROGRESS

In the year ended 31 March 1991 the three English Local Commissioners received a total of 9,169 referred complaints compared with 8,733 in the previous year. As in every previous year the main subjects of complaint were housing (39%) and planning (28%).

In the year: 8,501 complaints were examined but investigation was not pursued beyond the stage of obtaining the authorities' detailed comments on them, 319 full formal reports were issued. The number of complaints settled locally, at all stages of investigation, was 1,528.

Inquiries about the English Commission should be put to the Secretary—G. D. Adams, at 21 Queen Anne's Gate, London, SW1H 9BU (071-222 5622).

COMMISSION FOR LOCAL ADMINISTRATION IN WALES

Derwen House, Court Rd., Bridgend, CF31 1BN (0656 661325/6).

Local Commissioner: Hywel F. Jones, MA, IPFA.

Secretary: David Bowen, LLB.

The Commission for Local Administration in Wales was constituted by Section 23(1)(b) of the Local Government Act 1974, and consists of one Local Commissioner and the Parliamentary Commissioner, ex-officio.

The work of the Commission is concerned with complaints alleging maladministration by any of the 8 county councils, 37 district councils, 4 police authorities in Wales, the Land Authority for Wales, Internal Drainage Boards, the Development Board for Rural Wales (housing functions only), and the National Rivers Authority (flood defence functions). The jurisdiction of the Commission also extends to any joint board, the constituent authorities of which are all local authorities.

Under Paragraph 4(4) of Schedule 4 of the Local Government Act 1974, the Commission is required to ensure that staff are available to deal with complaints in the Welsh language. The Local Commissioner, the Secretary and two investigators are all fluent in Welsh and the Commission is able therefore to comply with the statutory obligation.

A bilingual leaflet "Your Local Ombudsman in Wales" explaining the complaints system is given to all persons enquiring about the work of the Commission. This leaflet is also obtainable from authorities within the jurisdiction of the Commission, government departments and citizens' advice bureaux.

Full reports on complaints investigated by the Local Commissioner have again been issued to the press and broadcasting authorities and the coverage given to these reports by the media generally throughout Wales has been very satisfactory.

Complaints continued to be received from all over Wales and the increasing tendency for many complaints—even those which the Local Commissioner eventually found he could not accept for investigation—to be complicated and involved has also continued.

Since April 1988, complaints of maladministration can be made to the Local Ombudsman direct.

During 1990-91 the consideration of 626 complaints was finalised during the year. Housing, planning and, to a lesser extent, highways continued to be the predominant services complained against as in previous years.

504 complaints were, for various reasons, outside the jurisdiction of the Local Commissioner, whilst 62 complaints were withdrawn mainly because the complainants had been satisfied by the actions taken by the Councils subsequent to the submission of their complaints. 60 were accepted for investigation.

The investigations of 6 complaints were discontinued because local authorities had acted to satisfy the complainants, and 54 reports on completed investigations were issued. Of these reports, 33 found injustice arising from maladministration, one found maladministration but no resulting injustice, and 20 reports recorded a finding of no maladministration.

The Local Commissioner issued one second report indicating his dissatisfaction with the action taken by the authority concerned after it had considered his report finding maladministration.

COMMISSIONER FOR LOCAL ADMINISTRATION IN SCOTLAND

5 Shandwick Place, Edinburgh EH2 4RG (031-229 4472; Fax 031-229 6020).

Commissioner: Robert Peggie, CBE

Secretary: Janice H. Renton, LLB

The Commissioner is appointed by the Crown on the recommendation of the Secretary of State under the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1975. His function is to investigate complaints from members of the public of injustice attributed to maladministration in local government.

NORTHERN IRELAND COMMISSIONER FOR COMPLAINTS

Progressive Hse., 33 Wellington Pl., Belfast, BT1 6HN (0232 233821).

The function of the Commissioner is to investigate complaints made to him by persons who claim to have suffered injustice in consequence of maladministration in connection with the administrative actions of local authorities and certain public bodies as specified in the Commissioner for Complaints Act (NI) 1969.

Commissioner: Mrs. J. McIvor.

Senior Director: K. McWilliams.

Director: J. MacQuarrie.

Deputy Directors: F. Penhallurick, D. Rodgers.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER FOR ADMINISTRATION

Church House, Great Smith St., London, SW1P 3BW (071-212 6271).

Commissioner: W. K. Reid, CB.

The Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration is an independent statutory officer whose function is to investigate complaints of maladministration brought to his notice by members of the House of Commons on behalf of members of the public.

His powers of investigation extend to actions taken by central government departments and certain other non-departmental public bodies in the exercise of their administrative functions, but not to policy decisions (which are the concern of the Government and can be questioned in Parliament). Certain administrative actions also outside his jurisdiction include matters affecting relations with other countries and matters relating to commercial transactions.

In the performance of his duties, the Parliamentary Commissioner has access to all official papers, and reports his findings to the member of Parliament who presented the case. The Parliamentary Commissioner reports annually to Parliament and may submit such other reports as he thinks fit. A Select Committee considers these reports.

NORTHERN IRELAND PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER FOR ADMINISTRATION

Progressive Hse., 33 Wellington Pl., Belfast, BT1 6HN (0232 233821).

The function of the Parliamentary Commissioner is to investigate complaints made to him by persons who claim to have suffered injustice in consequence of maladministration arising from action taken by one of the Northern Ireland government departments as specified in the Parliamentary Commissioner Act (NI) 1969. All complaints made to the Parliamentary Commissioner must be sponsored by a Member of Parliament.

Commissioner: Mrs. J. McIvor.

Senior Director: K. Williams.

Director: J. MacQuarrie.

Deputy Directors: D. Rodgers, F. Penhallurick.

HEALTH SERVICE COMMISSIONER

The offices of Health Service Commissioners for England, for Scotland and for Wales were set up with effect from 1 October 1973. The present holder of the three offices is W. K. Reid, CB.

The Health Service Commissioners investigate complaints from members of the public that they have suffered injustice or hardship as a result of failure in a service provided by one of the health authorities, or of their failure to provide a service which should have been provided, or of maladministration involved in other actions taken by health authorities. Before the Commissioners can investigate, the complaint must have been brought to the attention of the authority concerned, and an adequate opportunity given to investigate it and reply. They do not deal with complaints for which statutory procedures for investigation already exist (e.g. those about general medical and dental practitioners, pharmacists and opticians, or with complaints about actions taken solely in the exercise of clinical judgment). They do not normally investigate complaints for which a person could seek a remedy in the courts but they have discretion to do so.

The Commissioners report annually and may submit such other reports as they think fit, to the respective Secretaries of State who lay the reports before each House of Parliament. These reports are considered by the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

The Press Complaints Commission, a non-statutory body, was established in 1991 by the newspaper and magazine industry to replace The Press Council on the recommendation of the Committee on Privacy and Related Matters. The Commission, funded by the industry through the Press Standards Board of Finance, has an independent chairman, Lord McGregor of Durris, and 15 members, seven of them editors nominated by the newspaper and magazine industry.

It deals with complaints by the public about the contents and conduct of the press. The Commission enforces a 16 point Code of Practice agreed by a committee of editors for the industry. Complaints of breaches of the code should be made to the Commission's Director.

It aims to ensure the British Press maintains the highest professional standards having regard to generally established freedoms including freedom of expression and the public's right to know.

PURCHASING AND SUPPLIES

A review by

F. E. Harvey, Director, Eastern Shires Purchasing Organisation

Expenditure by local government on goods and services now exceeds £4 billion a year, a figure which will increase as authorities adopt more and more the enabling role promoted by central government.

Traditionally local authorities have purchased a wide range of goods and services to meet the needs of their many service departments and the supporting services. Major expenditure areas include education, housing, highways, social services, recreation, fire brigades and police. Today as a result of the Compulsory Competitive Tendering (CCT) legislation and additional financial pressures on authorities, the range is even wider as it now includes service contracts such as catering, cleaning of roads and buildings, grounds maintenance and vehicle maintenance.

The change of role by authorities from providers to enablers and the CCT legislation places even more importance on the procurement function within local government. It is vital that the procurement of goods and services conforms to the highest professional standards so ensuring probity, value for money and the proper use of public resources. The Government itself has recognised this through its own purchasing initiative and the establishment of the Central Unit on Purchasing. Moreover a paper by HM Treasury "Using Private Enterprise in Local Government identified that "It is not sufficiently recognised that the placing of service contracts is essentially a purchasing function. It requires similar expertise to the purchasing of goods."

Local authorities when undertaking the purchasing function for both goods and services must now comply with the new EEC Public Procurement Directives in addition to the relevant UK legislation. The need to show compliance with the Directives is important for all authorities, but even more so for those councils who are already receiving or wish to receive EEC grants.

Currently there are Directives for supplies and works contracts, and by 1993 there will be Directives covering services and compliance. The purpose of these Directives is to ensure free and fair access to all public sector business of the member countries by all firms located within the EEC.

The Service Directive will cover all contracts not included under the Supplies or Works Directive and will help achieve the aim of the Commission to have all local authorities purchasing above set values covered by Directives in time for the open market.

The Supplies Directive 88/297 covers contracts to a value exceeding 200,000 ECU (£132,000) with separate rules for IT purchases above. How this value is calculated is detailed within the Directive, but authorities should note that it is the greater of the total aggregated annual requirements of the authority or the value of the contract which has to be taken into account when deciding if they have to contract in accordance with the Directive's procedure. When calculating the aggregated values the purchases of the Direct Labour and Direct Service Organisations must be taken into account, whatever delegated powers these organisations have been given.

The Works Directive 71/305 covers all works contracts valued in excess of £5,000,000 ECU (£3,300,000).

The Services Directive is due to come into effect in 1992. The long term objective of the Commission is for this Directive to cover all service contracts. Initially there will be a two tier system with priority services, such as cleaning of buildings, advertising, management consultancy and printing being subject to rules similar to those included within the Supplies Directive. Residual services will be subject to less onerous procedures. Separate rules will apply for insurance services, design consultancy and services relating to construction contracts.

The Compliance Directive, which is expected to have a decisive role in terms of changing mentalities of contracting authorities, has now been approved by the EEC. Each member state now has the responsibility of producing legislation to implement the requirements of this Directive in time for the open market in 1992.

local authorities is undertaken either by individual central purchasing organisations or by a purchasing consortium. Joint purchasing by authorities is growing as councils find it more economic to aggregate their purchases to obtain the benefits of scale not only in relation to price but also in regard to specialist advice and other services. The methods by which authorities combine purchases fall mainly into two categories, either by the establishment of a jointly owned purchasing consortium or by a large authority providing a purchasing service on behalf of a smaller authority. The second method often relates to a service provided by a Shire County Council to a Shire District Council, but there are examples of two or more County Councils operating on this basis.

The new legislation relating to Education and the CCT services is putting pressure on purchasing and supplies organisations, in parallel with all other service departments within local government, to compete for the business offered by schools, colleges and the direct labour/service organisations. This has the benefit of ensuring that these organisations do not become over centralised or over bureaucratic as they must provide the prices and service required by their customers to remain in business.

Advice on purchasing matters is obtainable to local authorities and is available from a number of sources.

The Institute of Purchasing and Supply (details below) sets, tests and assesses professional standards and promotes the adoption of best performance practices. The Institute which covers both the public and commercial sectors, provides training and can offer advice on professional and technical matters including the EEC Directives. The Institute which has its own public sector and local government committees also represents the views of local government supplies officers in its consultations with the UK Government and the EEC.

The Association of County Supplies Officers (ACSO) which is open to Central Purchasing Officers within County Councils. The organisation provides an advisory service to the Association of County Councils and helps improve purchasing standards within its membership.

The London Borough Group and the Metropolitan Districts Association provide similar services to ACSO for their member authorities.

This does leave a void in relation to Shire District Councils and buyers within Direct Service/Direct Labour Organisations, and even client departments who do not use the services of the central purchasing organisation for CCT service procurement.

INSTITUTE OF PURCHASING AND SUPPLY

Easton House, Easton on the Hill, Stamford, Lincs., PE9 3NZ (0780 56777).

The Institute (the IPS) has over 20,000 Members, Associates and Students. It was formed in 1967 by merging the Purchasing Officers Association (founded in 1932) and the Institute of Public Supplies (1949).

There are IPS members in most sectors of UK industry, commerce and the public services. Together they spend billions of pounds annually on goods and services as well as having an immense stores and distribution responsibility.

The Institute aims to: ensure increasing public recognition of the contribution made by its members to the national economy and to the efficiency of the organisations in which they work; to develop the Purchasing and Supply function to enable it to benefit the nation's economy and industrial strength to maximum effect.

Education. The Professional Examination of the IPS is widely accepted as the best means of assessing the calibre of applicants for responsible purchasing and supply posts in both the public and private sectors. In addition the Certificate in Purchasing and Stores qualifies for membership of the Association of Supervisors in Purchasing and Supply.

Courses. The IPS provides a wide range of practical short courses (about 200 a year) designed to meet the training needs of all who are engaged in purchasing and supply, at all levels from beginners to directors.

Specialist Conferences. The IPS runs about 60 conferences a year with the aim of bringing together buyers and suppliers and others with a common interest in an industry, activity or material, to discuss current problems and longer-term questions of mutual concern.

Publications. The Institute publishes "Purchasing and Supply Management", "Procurement Weekly", "Logistics" and "Contracts Management" as well as specialist books.

Technical Advisory Service. A Technical Advisory Service answers speedily and accurately members' enquiries on professional, technical, legal and contractual matters in the purchasing, supply, stores, materials management and distribution fields.

Personnel Advisory Services. The Institute offers an appointments service for members and a Selection Advisory Service for employers.

Participation in Public Affairs. The IPS offers advice to government and national bodies on matters in which members' professional knowledge and experience can be helpful.

Ethics. The IPS has a strict code of ethics which is binding on its members.

NETLON & TENSAR MESH

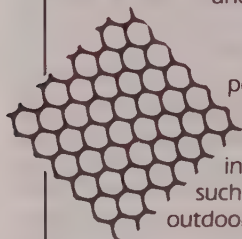

Protection for all seasons

Netlon Limited provide an extensive range of internationally established plastic net and mesh products. Manufactured from quality polypropylene and polyethylene, these high strength products are designed to protect, support, reinforce and shelter – economically and effectively.

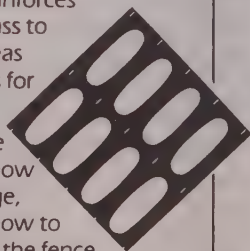

Providing protection for buildings and plants, Tensar Windbreak is designed to reduce windspeed without creating turbulence. Easy to handle and install, this product offers a high protection factor and excellent durability.

Litter is an unsightly and unhygienic hazard on civic amenity and landfill sites. Netlon Litter Fence provides a cost effective and unobtrusive catchment area to keep designated sections litter free.

For all areas subject to excessive pedestrian or vehicular traffic, Netlon Heavy Duty Parkguard protects and reinforces grassland by allowing the root mass to interlock with the mesh. Ideal for areas such as overspill car parks, access roads for outdoor events and caravan parks.

Tough enough to withstand the most severe gales, Tensar Shelter Shading is ideal for use as a snow fence. Specially designed apertures act as a knife edge, reducing the force of the wind whilst allowing the snow to pass through the mesh and fall away from the fence.

With a multitude of applications, including erosion and weed control, protection, support, shelter and shading, the versatile range of Netlon products offers a cost effective and durable alternative to traditional products.

“GROWTH THROUGH QUALITY”

INSTITUTE OF WASTES MANAGEMENT

9 Saxon Ct., St. Peter's Gdns, Northampton, NN1 1SX (0604 20426; Fax 0604 21339).

The Institute of Wastes Management is an association of qualified professional and technical persons experienced and expert in all aspects of the management of wastes. It is the only body in the United Kingdom to specialise in this field, to provide training in all branches of the subject, and to conduct examinations which are recognised officially as setting a qualifying standard in wastes management.

The present wastes generated by complex industrial and manufacturing processes and modern society produce highly technical problems of collection, handling, disposal and pollution control. These factors require persons of professional competence, adequately trained and suitably qualified to assess the scientific and technological significance of dealing appropriately with such wastes. To nurture these skills the Institute's primary objectives are the promotion of scientific, technical and practical aspects of waste management for the safeguarding of the environment. These aims are pursued through conferences, symposia, research, technical working groups, training courses, examinations and consultation in the formulation of legislation and codes of practice.

The Institute recognising the widely changing conditions caused by new legislative controls affecting the industry is restructuring its training and examination requirements. The health and safety of the public and protection of the environment depends upon high professional standards from the Industry. This requires a new syllabus for the Diploma and a training framework for improved professional competence in waste management. The increasing importance and complexity of waste management makes it vital that everyone entrusted with responsibility should be aware of the need for training and professional competence in this field. The Institute is the only body in the UK to provide a syllabus of specialist training in all branches of the subject and to approve a system of examinations acceptable as a qualifying standard in waste management, in the UK and overseas countries. The Institute has established a sound framework of courses and is continuing to bring on stream new courses designed to meet the needs of an increasingly sophisticated industry. It will continually examine and, where necessary, revise and update its courses to take account of the new and changing legislation.

The Institute is proud of its responsible and influential role as consultee to the Department of the Environment, Central Government and other bodies in the drawing up of new legislation and codes of practice within the Industry.

The Institute provides an umbrella organisation in which experts working in the various sectors of waste management can meet together, hold meetings, conferences and symposia, present technical papers, exchange views and disseminate expert guidance to all concerned.

Secretary-General: R. A. Bispham, BSc, ACGI, DMS, CEng, FlnstWM, MICE, MBIM.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF WASTE DISPOSAL CONTRACTORS

Mountbarrow Hse., 6/20 Elizabeth St., Victoria, London, SW1W 9RB (071-824 8882; Fax 071-824 8753).

NAWDC is the recognised representative body for the commercial waste management industry in the UK. Membership is open to organisations operating on a commercial basis (whether privately or publicly owned) in the fields of collection, transport, treatment, reclamation and disposal of wastes, as well as to those who supply equipment, vehicles and specialist services to the industry. Producers of wastes are welcomed as affiliate members.

Operational members are required to sign the NAWDC Code of Conduct as evidence of their commitment to maintaining the highest standards of waste management. Any breach of the Code is investigated and if established, may involve a disciplinary penalty (which could be expulsion).

NAWDC is active in representing its members' interests at local, national and international level. It is regularly consulted by Government and is represented on working parties and peer groups. Through its membership of the Federation European des Activités du Dechet (FEAD) it is in close contact with the European Commission and the European Parliament. An extensive, highly regarded and developing programme provides training for nearly 1,000 students each year while NAWDC is one of the founder members of the Waste Management Industry Training and Advisory Board (WAMITAB).

The fundamental aim of the Association is that through its activities, membership is publicly recognised as providing assurance that wastes will be dealt with efficiently, effectively and above all safely. A range of specialist publications and guidelines are produced covering a variety of aspects of waste management.

SAY HELLO TO OUR NEW

THE SCARAB MINOR HYDROSTATIC

It's arrived. The new Scarab Minor — all the advantages of an expensive, sophisticated compact sweeper with none of the hassle. Or expense.

The well proven Minor sweeping system and hopper design have been retained — but improved, while keeping the same virtues of rugged simplicity for which Scarabs are famous.

The purpose-built chassis is entirely new and offers more power — thanks to a Ford Transit Turbo diesel engine, more work capacity and less fatigue thanks to a single pedal hydrostatic drive/sweep control together with standard finger tip power steering to reach all those tricky corners

Not that the Scarab Minor Hydrostatic is some high-tech pipe dream, you understand. A good solid truck type chassis, front engine/tilt cab layout will not give your fitters nightmares. Proper automotive suspension gives comfortable 40mph travel speeds while front power disc brakes are there for safety's sake.

With a conventional or high-tip option it's an impressive package — a 2 cubic metre hopper within a 3500kg GVW. Faster, quieter and with the finger tip controls of big brother Major, easier to operate. And like any new baby, it looks pretty cut too . . .

THE A IS FOR ADDED VERSATILITY IN OUR REFUSE COLLECTION RANGE

When people talk refuse collection, we listen. That's why we've been producing chassis to meet your requirements for 40 years. And so, after listening to specialists about the changes taking place, we have developed additional new vehicles to meet the exacting demands of the 1990s.

The augmented Seddon Atkinson Municipal range now offers more horsepower, less weight for more payload, 4x2, 6x2 and 6x4 models, narrow track versions, 3-man cabs, a wider choice of economical Perkins Phaser engines and superb transmissions. In other words, refuse trucks you can't refuse.

As an added bonus all Seddon Atkinson trucks come with Roadwise, our all-inclusive support service. This includes extended warranties, vehicle leasing, fixed-cost maintenance programmes and competitive Fleetrite replacement parts.

If you're involved in waste handling, you should take a look at our expanded range of superb refuse vehicle chassis. Don't waste any time – contact Seddon Atkinson Vehicles Limited, Woodstock Factory, Oldham OL2 6HP or telephone 061-624 0566 today for more information.

SOCIAL SERVICES

A review by R. J. Lewis, Hon. Secretary, Association of Directors of Social Services

The past year has seen the introduction of two major pieces of legislation, the Children Act 1989 and the Community Care Act 1990, which together will bring about some of the most fundamental changes in the provision of personal Social Services since the modern Welfare State was created over forty years ago.

The Children Act will be implemented in its entirety in October 1991. It is the most comprehensive piece of legislation which Parliament has ever enacted about children, representing a wide ranging reform and complete overhaul of the court system through which children pass. It sweeps away and replaces in practice 50 years of child care legislation. It is intended to make the law more accessible both to professionals and families alike.

The Children Act is part of a rolling programme of family law reform moving the emphasis away from adversarial contests in legalistic proceedings towards conciliation and a shared interest in producing mutually agreed solutions with the welfare and needs of the child remaining the prime consideration. All courts must treat the welfare of the child as the paramount consideration when reaching any decision about upbringing.

The Act is based on a number of key principles which will significantly affect the way local authorities and the courts deal with families in the future. One of these principles is that in future parents will be seen as having "parental responsibility" rather than rights; this phrase is used throughout the Act to sum up the collection of duties, rights and authority which a parent has in respect of their child. The role of the Local Authority is examined in some detail with an emphasis on the fact that when an authority has to arrange for a child to live away from home, for either a short or a long period of time, this should preferably be under voluntary arrangements with the parents. Parents can retain their parental responsibility by acting as far as possible with/as partners of the local authority. In some cases this may not be possible and key changes relating to emergency protection and care proceedings are also to be introduced.

Notwithstanding the provisions of the Children Act, social services departments throughout the country have continued, and will continue their move from residential care for children in their care, to substitute family care. A network of foster carers now exist throughout the county who offer short or long term care in a family home to children when it is no longer possible for them to live in their own homes. Current philosophy requires small scale, local peripatetic and more flexible resources rather than more institutional provision. The focus of most work is now with the whole family so the "new" childrens establishments act as a focal point for undertaking work with other family members perhaps demonstrating cooking, parenting or other life skills.

Adoption continues to be one of the high profile areas of work of departments. The recent phenomenon concerned the adoption of Romanian children led to a national system being established by the Department of Health which now appears to be working satisfactorily after some initial controversy.

Child protection continues to attract intense media attention, particularly following allegations relating to alleged ritualistic abuse. On a day to day basis, departments continue to undertake child protection work in conjunction with other agencies particularly the police and health authorities. The emphasis is very much on "working together" and this has been the theme which has underlined recent Government guidance.

The National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 is being implemented on a phased basis. Local authorities implemented Phase 1 on 1st April, 1991 and are currently preparing for the implementation of Phases 2 and 3 from April 1992 and 1993, confirming Social Services activities as the lead agency in Community care.

April 1991 saw the establishment by local authorities of "arms-length" inspection units with responsibility for monitoring standards of care to the same level in residential homes in the local authority, private and voluntary sectors. In addition new complaints procedures have been established and firm monitoring and procedural arrangements for the investigation of complaints now exist. From April 1991 the Government have made available the mental illness specific grant and the specific grant for drug and alcohol services. In addition Government grants for Social Services training have been increased.

By 1st April, 1992 local authorities are required to publish Community Care Plans. There are drawn up following widespread consultation with users, carers and other agencies, and must plan for the provision of community care services within their given geographical area. From that date development work on assessment and case management systems which is currently in the early stages of preparation will be undertaken. This will involve local authorities assessing the care needs of any person who appears to them to need community care and decide in the light of that assessment from where those services should be in effect purchased.

From April 1993 new benefit arrangements including the transfer of resources from the Social Security budget to local authorities to enable Social Services departments to organise suitable packages of care will be introduced.

The first phase of the introduction is now well under way with independent inspection units established across the country. The new units also have certain responsibilities regarding the inspection of independent boarding schools which has opened up a whole new area of work.

In addition to these changes and the pressures they bring, the review of Local Government brings with it the prospect of yet further changes. Social Services departments operate in different types of authorities (County Councils, Metropolitan and London Boroughs) and within different organisational arrangements, for instance as part of amalgams with housing and environmental health functions, as well as in stand-alone departments. However, despite the differing size and shape of departments and the complexity of their work, Social Services departments have remained a consistent feature of local government and continue to be flexible to and responsive to need. Current changes in the National Health Service have had significant implications for personal Social Services.

The nature of Social Services departments is to be pro-active rather the re-active as they are based on well established values and traditions. They have always been flexible and the last year has tested that ability to respond to increased demand, policy, expectations and new legislation. Whatever changes are to occur in the future they must reflect the fact that the services arranged and provided by Social Services departments are vitally important to the quality of life of many of the most vulnerable, disadvantaged and disabled people in our society. The focus must always remain on services to meet individual needs, with the welfare of the individual the paramount concern.

THE NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR SOCIAL WORK (NISW)

The Institute:—

- Identifies and promotes good practice and good management in social work and social care.
- Encourages agencies in all sectors to be responsible to users, carers and communities.
- Develops the effectiveness of staff working in all sectors of the personal social services.
- Contributes to changes in social policy and its implementation.

ACTIVITIES

Consultancy and In-house Training

Consultancy is provided on a long or short-term basis to individual agencies in the personal social services and to groups of agencies. In-house training, tailored to the needs of staff groups and to organisational objectives, can be arranged by negotiation.

Practice Development

The Practice and Development Exchange provides information about innovations in the field of social care, promotes development work and the diffusion of new methods of practice, including Black communities.

The Social Care Unit aims to enhance good practice in direct services to users and their carers and in the management of services through consultancy, training and networking with relevant organisations.

Other practice development includes promoting user centred services in managing change in social services departments and policy conferencing which focusses on how organisations can involve staff in shaping and influencing policy.

Race Equality Unit

The independent Race Equality Unit provides advice, consultancy and support to Social Services Departments and related agencies in the development and implementation of Race Equality policies and practice, both in staffing and service delivery. It organises study days, information exchange and forum activities.

Research

The Research Unit aims to carry out high quality evaluative research in the personal social services and to disseminate the results as widely as possible. It has always had a particular interest in the perspective of service users and their carers. Most of the Unit's work is funded by the Department of Health. Current work includes research on frail elderly people, and on the inter-relationships between the help provided by family and friends and that provided by health and social services; hospital discharge; respite care; home help; home care schemes; ethnic record keeping and monitoring in social services departments, which is being carried out jointly with the Race Equality Unit and the Social Services Research Group.

Plans for the future include new studies in the field of community care and a new programme of research on the personal social services workforce and the training initiatives now being developed for staff.

Policy Development

NISW has a key role in co-ordinating and supporting work on policy in the personal social services. It has provided a neutral base for the work of bodies such as the Barclay Committee on the role and tasks of social workers, the Wagner Committee on Residential Care, and co-ordinating work on the development of a General Social Services Council.

It services a Policy Forum of major representative bodies in the personal social services convened to further the debate on key issues at national level and encourage development of new perspectives among decision makers.

NISW also hosts conferences and seminars on issues of current concern.

Education and Staff Development

NISW runs a 1-year CCETSW approved part-time post qualifying course in Staff Development and Education for educators and trainers in the personal social services. The course leads to a post graduate diploma in social work education from the University of Sheffield.

"Individually Negotiated Programmes of Advanced Study" are tailored to the needs of individual students who are expected to have substantial work experience. The INPAS scheme is particularly attractive to students from overseas who may come for a period of 3 to 6 months.

Short courses provided are intended for managers or practitioners across the sectors and adopt a participatory style, enabling people to learn from each other as well as from tutors and contributors.

Library and Information Services

The Library has a large collection of books and journals on social work, social services and related subjects. This is supplemented by access to external databases and a wide range of information providers. The library is open for reference to visitors. NISWIS (the NISW Information Service) is a subscription service for social services departments and other agencies. Social Care Update is a monthly listing of recently published books and journal articles available to individual subscribers as well as members of NISWIS.

Publications

There are two main series of publications based on the work of the Institute.

- National Institute for Social Work Papers, mainly concerned with social work education and training, management and policy issues.
- Practice and Development Exchange Papers, mainly concerned with innovations in practice and staff development.

The Library and Information Services also produces occasional Briefing Papers on topics of current interest.

The major reports of the Research Unit are published by Gower and HMSO.

The Race Equality Unit also publishes reports and practice guides.

International Work

The Institute's International work is mainly carried out through consultancy abroad, working with study fellows who undertake individually planned programmes, and offering visiting scholars and practitioners a base during their stay in the UK. Staff participate in international conferences and the institute is a member of the International Association of Schools for Social Work.

Together with other key organisations, the Institute is undertaking a feasibility study for an International Centre to act as a clearing house for study visits, in order to give both visitors to the UK and British visitors abroad access to national resources and expertise.

Comment and advice is given through consultation on a whole range of matters within the Social Services field. A quarterly News Bulletin is published for members of the Association; commentary papers, evidence to committees of inquiry etc. are published and are generally available.

Hon. Secretary: R. J. Lewis, Director of Social Services, Stockport MBC, Town Hall, Stockport, SK1 3XE (061-474 7896).

CENTRAL COUNCIL FOR EDUCATION AND TRAINING IN SOCIAL WORK (CCETSW)

Derbyshire Hse., St. Chad's St., London WC1H 8AD (01-278 2455).

The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work which came into being in 1971 is an independent body with statutory authority to promote education and training for social work and social care provided by the personal social services throughout the UK. It has responsibility for training social workers and social care staff in day, domiciliary, field, residential, health, and education services provided by local authorities in England, Wales and Scotland and by the health and social services board and education and library boards in Northern Ireland. It also has responsibility for training probation officers, and social work and social care staff in the voluntary sector. In collaboration with the Care Sector Consortium (the lead industry body) educational institutions, Government departments and other bodies, CCETSW is developing a progressive continuum of training, education and qualifications for all social care and social work staff. As part of this continuum CCETSW is one of the three Joint Awarding Bodies approving assessment arrangements and awarding national vocational qualifications in social care. It approves two types of social care training, In-Service Courses in Social Care and courses leading to the Preliminary Certificate in Social Care. At qualifying level CCETSW approves courses leading to the Certificate of Qualification in Social Work (CQSW), the Certificate in Social Service (CSS) and the Diploma in Social Work (DipSW). Courses leading to the CSS and the CQSW will be phased out, leaving the DipSW as the only current award available in social work. CCETSW will continue to recognize the CCS and the CQSW. CCETSW approves agencies which provide effective practice learning opportunities for students on these three qualifying courses. It approves practice teacher courses and issues a practice teaching award. At post qualifying level CCETSW provides a framework for education and training leading to the Advanced Award, and approves programmes of study for experienced social workers. It also approves courses designed to prepare social workers for undertaking the mental health responsibilities of their employers. CCETSW provides, promotes and supports short courses, workshops and conferences and commissions social work education and training research projects. The Council awards grants to students from England, Scotland and Wales on post graduate CQSW and DipSW courses and to voluntary organisations to enable students to be seconded for basic qualifying training. It also provides financial support for students on its post qualifying programmes. In addition CCETSW produces a range of publications. Social workers who qualify outside the UK may apply to the Council for verification of their qualification.

A Review by The Institution of Civil Engineers Association of Municipal Engineers

The Association of Municipal Engineers (AME) was formed in 1984, following the merger of the Institution of Municipal Engineers with the Institution of Civil Engineers (ICE) and is now a specialist group within the ICE. The work of the AME is undertaken by Standing Committees, and where appropriate ad-hoc Sub-committees or Working Groups reporting to the AME Board, who in turn reports to the ICE Council. The work of AME is within a declared business plan recommended to the ICE Council.

The AME makes every endeavour to preserve the tradition of the former Institution, and in particular advises the ICE Council on all matters related to public service engineering practice, and Local and Central Government matters, and prepares responses to Government consultation papers on behalf of the ICE. AME provides a focus for the development of technical and management excellence of municipal and public sector civil engineers and the promotion of professional competence for the benefit of the community. It seeks to promote and enhance the identity, contribution and influence of members within and outside the profession.

The AME fosters a sense of community amongst the membership, and enables close links to be maintained with colleagues at all levels working in the Public Sector. It helps to widen members' professional interests with meetings, seminars and visits related to public services engineering arranged both through the 15 local AME Regional Divisions and centrally in London.

The membership of AME is 11,000 and rising, all of whom are in one of the grades of membership of ICE and are generally engaged by Public Authorities, Consultants or Contractors working in the Public Sector in the United Kingdom or abroad. With this mix of membership AME provides a forum for an exchange of ideas and views.

To meet the challenges of the 1990's the structure of AME has been streamlined in recent months and the work of the AME Board is undertaken by five Standing Committees viz.

1. Municipal Affairs Committee: responsible for public administration, finance and management.
2. Municipal Technical Services Committee: responsible for traffic management, public transport, transportation highway maintenance and road safety.
3. Waste Management Sewerage and Water Committee.
4. Editorial Committee: responsible for the production of "Municipal Engineer".
5. Divisional Committee: responsible for the close link between local Divisions and Headquarters. In addition, in order to promote a close liaison between Division and the AME Board, each Division has a representative on the Board.

A popular feature of AME activities is the four-day Annual Conference held in different regions of the United Kingdom and is always well attended by members, and supported by Elected Members to Public Authorities. In addition there is an enthusiasm for special seminars and lectures arranged around matters of current public concern, recent examples of which are traffic congestion and recycling.

TRANSPORT AND ROAD RESEARCH LABORATORY

Applied research concerned with standards for the design, construction, and maintenance of highways; with regulations for vehicle construction and use; with the efficiency and safety of traffic movement; and with policy development relating to road transport generally.

The Laboratory also has an Overseas Unit which undertakes research on road problems overseas.

Director: D. F. Cornelius, BSc, CPhys, FIP, FIHT, FRSA.

Address: Transport and Road Research Laboratory, Crowthorne, Berks., RG11 6AU (0344 773131).

Address of Scottish Branch: Transport and Road Research Laboratory (Scottish Branch), Craigshill West, Livingston, West Lothian, EH54 5DU (0506 31921).

2 Park St., London, W1A 2BS (T.A.: Standards, London, W1—Tel: 071-629 9000, Telex: 266933); Sales Office: Linford Wood, Milton Keynes, MK14 6LE (0908 221166), Telex: 825777

BSI derives its origin from the Engineering Standards Committee established by the Institution of Civil Engineers in April 1901, on the initiative of Sir John Wolfe Barry (then President). The Committee was enlarged to include representatives of other professional institutions, was incorporated as the British Engineering Standards Association in 1918, and was granted a Royal Charter in 1929. A Supplemental Charter, granted in 1931, extended its scope beyond engineering and changed the name to British Standards Institution.

BSI is the recognised authority for the preparation and promulgation of National standards in the United Kingdom, and its work covers the whole range of industry.

British Standards prepared under the authority of the Road Engineering Standards Committee, the Automobile Standards Committee (for current membership see below) and other BSI Committees provide specifications for use in contracts, and other guidance on a wide range of items of interest to those concerned with roads and transport; materials, plant and equipment for road construction; lighting and traffic control; automobile components, materials, electrical equipment and signalling; safety equipment. Sectional lists of British Standards for Road Engineering and Automobiles can be obtained from BSI (Sales Office).

Institution of Civil Engineers, 1-7 Great George Street, London SW1P 3AA (071-222 7722).

The Association of Municipal Engineers was formed in 1984 following the merger of the Institution of Municipal Engineers with the Institution of Civil Engineers and is a Division of the Institution of Civil Engineers. It is governed by a Board reporting to the Institution's Council.

The Association aims to preserve the essential aims and traditions of the former Institution of Municipal Engineers which include the promotion of the science of engineering and cognate subjects as applied to all or any of the duties imposed upon or services undertaken by local authorities and other public undertakings, for the benefit of the community, with the object of securing the highest degree of efficiency in the discharge of such duties and operation of such services and the promotion of the highest standard of professional competence and practice among engineers and surveyors employed by those authorities.

Membership: The Membership of the AME is about 10,500 all of whom are in a grade of membership in the Institution of Civil Engineers and most are directly or indirectly involved in the services of local authorities, regional water authorities and other public bodies in the UK and overseas.

Work of the Association: The AME has two main standing committees, the Municipal Affairs Committee and the Municipal Engineering Committee which study and report on all matters affecting public sector engineering. There is also a regional organisation split into 15 areas of the UK.

A four day conference is organised annually and is attended by members and representatives from Local Authorities and other public bodies. Special seminars and debates are arranged for the discussion of matters of public concern and at which technical papers are presented.

The Association of Municipal Engineers provides the Editorial Committee for the Institution of Civil Engineers publication "Municipal Engineer" which contains technical papers on all aspects of the work of the public service engineer.

WEST YORKSHIRE HIGHWAYS, ENGINEERING AND TECHNICAL SERVICES JOINT COMMITTEE

Selectapost 6, Dudley House, 133 Albion Street, Leeds LS2 8JX—Tel: 0532 476295, Telex: 556170, Fax: 0532 476357

Chairman: D. E. Gabb, OBE, (Leeds City Council)

Director: W. F. Cotton, BA, DMS, CEng, FICE, MIHT

The Joint Committee was established on 1st April 1986 following the abolition of West Yorkshire Metropolitan County Council by the successor Highway Authorities, being the District Councils of Bradford, Calderdale, Kirklees, Leeds and Wakefield. Leeds City Council is the Lead Authority.

The purpose behind the formation of the Joint Committee was to retain the high level of technical expertise developed by the County Council in certain areas by the creation of a central unit. This provides a service to each District Highways Department at a level which could not be economically supported on an individual basis. Certain of the services are not taken up by Bradford.

The services, which are also available on a consultancy basis to Local Authorities outside West Yorkshire, are set out briefly below.

- (i) Design, installation and maintenance of Urban Traffic Control Systems.
- (ii) Transportation surveys, studies, interpretation of data including evaluation of transport needs, feasibility studies, route location and preliminary highway design.
- (iii) Noise studies under the Land Compensation Act; Design and supervision of noise insulation contracts. Vibration studies.
- (iv) Provision and analysis of accident information, analysis of causes and recommendations for remedial measures.

- (v) Materials Laboratory including soil surveys and soil testing, materials testing and mining sub-sidence advice.
- (vi) Technical computing service and maintenance of mobile radio system.
- (vii) Training school for highway operatives.
- (viii) Detailed design of major highway schemes.
- (ix) Inspection maintenance and repair of existing bridgestock and design of new highway structures.
- (x) Preparation of tender documents and supervision of major highway and bridgeworks contracts.

Role of the Board

The British Railways Board was constituted by the Transport Act 1962 and took over some of the assets of the former British Transport Commission on 1st January 1963. The Board's duty is to provide railway services in Great Britain and such other ancillary services and facilities as appear expedient.

Certain of the Board's obligations result from EEC regulations and in this connection the Railways Act 1974 required the Board to operate from 1st January 1975 "its railway passenger system so as to provide a public service which is comparable generally with that provided by the Board at present".

In addition to operating railway services the Board controls a group of subsidiary businesses which include, British Rail Maintenance Ltd., British Rail Property Board and Transportation Systems and Market Research Ltd.

The role of the Board is to provide railway services which meet the needs of the public and industry with the highest levels of efficiency consistent with achieving its financial aims within the framework set by Government.

The overall financial aim is to be viable on a long term basis, after including revenues from Government and local authorities in their role of customers and after taking into account the implications of any external borrowing. All rail business sectors and subsidiary activities are encouraged to develop, in order that each shall make an adequate contribution to the attainment of the overall financial aim. BR's freight sector, Railfreight, provides a domestic refuse disposal service to four local authority areas—Greater London, Greater Manchester, Avon and Edinburgh. The waste is collected at compaction plants where it is loaded into specialised rail-borne containers which are then transported to distant landfill sites.

The management structure of the Board is currently being reorganised from a geographical to a business sector basis.

TWINNING WITH LOCAL AUTHORITIES IN OTHER COUNTRIES

The Joint Twinning Committee of the Local Authority Associations of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (JTC) is the recognised body on twinning in the United Kingdom. The Committee was set up in 1962 to co-ordinate the development of twinning and minimise overlapping, to have central information about twinings and a register of all twinings that exist or are planned and to assist local authorities and communities to develop new and existing twinings. Since 1989 it has been constituted as a committee of the Local Government International Bureau (LGIB).

The Committee meets three times a year and is made up of representatives nominated by the six associations of local authorities in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, together with associate members comprising representatives of central government departments and agencies and other national organisations directly concerned with international links. It establishes policy on links but leaves the day-to-day administration to its Secretariat.

The Secretariat, headed by David Herbert, keeps records of requests for new links from Britain and overseas and is able to provide and suggest twinning partners. Keeping in close touch with the national sections of the Council of European Municipalities and Regions concerned with the links and the network now being established throughout the rest of the world, the Secretariat is able to put tentative partners in contact with one another.

The Twinning Section of the LGIB, which provides the Secretariat of the JTC, holds seminars in different parts of Britain, providing an opportunity for local authorities and members of twinning associations to exchange experience and discuss problems.

The LGIB produces two handbooks entitled "Places in Partnership". One booklet is a guide to twinning practice entitled "A Twinning Handbook" and gives information on how to go about twinning. The other booklet is a list of all registered British twinings. The list of twinings which follows is correct at the time of going to press, and is used in the Municipal Year Book by kind permission of the Joint Twinning Committee.

Local authority interest in twinning has maintained its high level of previous years especially in respect of the economic area of relationships. It is encouraging to report that many local authorities who had previously not involved themselves in a twinning relationship are now considering such proposals. Moves for twinning relationships with Eastern Europe have been particularly encouraging.

Information on twinning can be obtained from the Joint Twinning Committee at the Local Government International Bureau, 35 Great Smith Street, London SW1P 3BJ (071-222 1636). (Secretary: David R. Herbert)

The type of British local authority is identified by the following key and shown in brackets after the name of each authority; the details of each authority can be traced in the Year Book by reference to the index to Local Authorities on the yellow pages. Where the key indicates a district council in England or Wales, but the twinned town has a name other than that of the district council this will indicate that the twinning is sponsored by a parish or town council in England or a community council in Wales.

WATER

A review by Paula Williams

Information Officer, Office of Water Services (OFWAT)

Background

The Water Act 1989 replaced the previous 10 water and sewerage authorities—controlled by elected committees—with successor private companies as duly appointed water and sewerage undertakers and brought the 29 existing privately owned water companies under the same regulatory regime.

The Act established, as for the other privatised utilities, an independent economic regulator (Ofwat) to safeguard the interests of the consumer. The 10 water authorities' previous responsibility for regulating pollution was transferred to the newly set up National Rivers Authority who regulate sewage and effluent disposal to rivers, lakes and coastal waters together with duties for land drainage and flooding protection. The Drinking Water Inspectorate is responsible for regulating the quality of drinking water. The water industry is, therefore, regulated in all aspects of its functions.

Development

In the first 18 months of operation there have been considerable changes in the industry, not least of which has been a reduction in the number of companies through mergers or rationalisation of some of the smaller companies which were already in common ownership.

Number of companies

By June 1991 the number of Water Only companies had reduced from 29 to 24. Lee Valley, Rickmansworth and Colne Valley water companies merged to form Three Valleys Water Services plc. Eastbourne Water, Mid Sussex Water and West Kent Water rationalised their day to day operations under a single management team to form a new holding company, South East Water Ltd; Newcastle and Gateshead Water Company and Sunderland and South Shields Water Company also integrated under a single management team to form North East Water Ltd. Each of the new companies will be issued with a new single Licence of Appointment in due course.

The Three Valleys proposed merger was referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, to whom the Director General of Ofwat gave evidence. The Director General has a statutory duty to promote efficiency and economy on the part of the water companies and one way of achieving this is by comparing the performance of different water companies. The Director General would argue strongly against any reduction in the number of independent water companies if it affected his ability to make comparisons of their efficiency. However in this case the benefits to customers of lower bills arising from efficiency savings outweighed the loss of a comparator. For South East Water and North East Water, neither of these integrations involved a reference to the Monopolies Commission because the companies were already in common ownership and there was a good case for agreeing the rationalisations.

There have also been changes in the obligations and reporting requirements of the companies, both from the regulatory regimes and from new obligations placed upon the companies by the European Community.

Changes in obligations

When the companies were established it was recognised that considerable sums of money would need to be spent to upgrade infrastructure and to bring water supplies and sewage treatment up to requirements of recent legislation. This legislation includes the Drinking Water Quality Regulations, and controls on bathing water quality and discharge of sewage to rivers and the sea.

The pricing mechanism for the companies was set to take account of these obligations, with a formula for maximum price rises of RPI plus K, where K represents the amount needed to finance the programme of capital expenditure and the provision of services to customers. K values were set for ten years, to be reviewed after that time or after five years at the request of either the company or the Director General. As the industry is spending more than £28 billion until the year 2000 to implement its programme the pricing mechanism allows for water bills to rise by an average of 5% more than the rate of inflation each year until the year 2000.

Since the price limits were set the UK Government has adopted a major new European Community Directive—the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive—and the implications for the industry are far reaching. The Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive requires the water companies to end the dumping of sewage sludge at sea by 1998 and to provide additional facilities at sewage treatment works which currently discharge into the sea and estuaries. This will add to companies' costs. Further costs will arise from a range of other proposals under discussion such as statutory River Quality Objectives and changes in consenting policy. Meeting these additional obligations will involve companies in costs which were not allowed for in the original K setting. If they cannot fund these from savings in other areas companies can apply to the Director General for an interim adjustment to their K factor to increase prices in order to meet the obligations. Before agreeing to any such adjustments Ofwat will scrutinise the application to ensure it is absolutely necessary.

There is a clear trade off between the costs of the service borne by the consumers and the overall quality of that service. That balance was fundamental in the initial K setting by the Secretaries of State. Any new environmental or other initiatives will impact upon companies' costs and hence on the costs of service provision to consumers. All involved in the industry, including customers, need to work with each other to ensure that costs and benefits are balanced and new initiatives are properly costed prior to decisions being made so that their impact is clearly understood.

It seems clear that as Britain and Europe become increasingly environmentally conscious further legislation will continue to place new obligations upon the industry. Consumers want, and will be getting, higher quality water, cleaner beaches and a better protected environment but at a cost—the days of cheap water are over and water bills will continue to rise substantially into the next decade.

Regulatory regime

A major task for Ofwat will be managing the uncertainties caused by unexpected changes in quality standards which create new obligations for the companies. It will do this through monitoring the companies' progress in meeting their obligations—partly through companies' annual returns to Ofwat. 1991 was the first year in which information was collected on a standard basis by all companies, enabling meaningful comparisons to be made on their performance and progress. The 1991 report provided key areas of information over and above that provided in the 1990 report. The approach to monitoring will continue to be extended and refined in the future giving a base of high quality independently audited information.

The information from this year's report will enable Ofwat to:

- monitor overall levels of capital expenditure to ensure that if there is slippage customers do not pay unnecessary increases in charges;
- measure progress on levels of service indicators;
- monitor progress on improving asset quality;
- measure (in conjunction with the Drinking Water Inspectorate and the NRA) progress on compliance with drinking water quality standards, sewage treatment works consents and bathing waters.

Where the information is not commercial in confidence it will be published.

Future Developments

Charging for water

The Water Act prohibits companies from using rateable value based methods of charging for water after March 2000 so alternative methods must be sought. Given the increasing cost of supplying water it is desirable that the new charging methods should promote efficiency in the use of water resources, without imposing hardship on those who only use water for essential purposes.

Companies already face the problem of how to charge for new properties which do not have a rateable value and are dealing with this in a variety of ways. Some are allocating notional rateable values while others have installed meters.

Accordingly Ofwat took the decision to undertake a full consultation on the best way for consumers to pay for their water services, launching the consultation exercise in November 1990.

Consumers were given information on the three main approaches to charging under consideration, including the respective advantages and disadvantages of each and asked to express views on their preferences. The choices outlined were a flat rate charge or licence fee, property banding and metering.

A response was sought to four key questions:

- * should there be a priority for incentives—for customers to save water and for companies to provide the service the customers want?

- * should charges be designed to relate to the amount of water used or should tariffs take into account other matters?

- * if metering is to be adopted how fast and over what area, would it be appropriate for it to spread over the next ten years?

- * what should be the future method of charging be for households without meters?

The consultation was far reaching—Ofwat's regional network of offices sought replies from many local organisations, including local authorities and the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys carried out a survey of a representative sample of some 3,700 households. However the largest input was from a short questionnaire mailed to more than 18 million customers through the water companies.

There has been a good response to the consultation—there were nearly 290,000 replies from the questionnaire survey and responses have also been received from virtually all the major interest groups.

The results of the survey show that more than half of the people who responded were in favour of metering as the way forward. The majority of those who chose metering cited fairness—you pay for what you use—and the ability to control the size of their bills as the main reasons for choosing this option.

The other main option chosen was property banding, with some 25% of people choosing this, and also a fairly substantial number opting to keep the existing rating system, which is not possible under present legislation.

Since completing the consultation there has been a change which may affect the way forward. The Government's proposals to introduce the Council Tax, based partly on a system of property banding, may well make using that option more attractive to the water companies as they will not have to take the responsibility of allocating suitable property bands but could use the Government's "ready made" system. The proposals are, however, still at too early a stage to be able to predict whether it will be possible for the council tax to be used as a basis for the property banding method of charging.

The next few years will see considerable changes as companies gradually begin to implement new methods of charging. It is likely that methods will vary in different parts of the country, depending on the scarcity of existing resources, the demand placed upon them and the cost of providing new resources. Ofwat will be issuing guidelines to companies on factors to be taken into account when implementing changes.

Customer perceptions

The customer has an important role to play as the end user of water. Ofwat is undertaking a survey into customer attitudes to find out which areas of the companies services they consider important, where they would like to see improvements, and whether and how much they are prepared to pay for such improvements. This is a continuation of the consultation process which has already been taking place through Ofwat's network of regional Customer Service Committees, based in the regions. The CSC's meet every two to three months and the meetings are open to the public. So far they have discussed such areas as companies' effectiveness in dealing with leaks, their Codes of Practice on Disconnection, and their progress on capital investment programmes and their services to particular groups such as the disabled, often leading to improved practices by the companies.

OFFICE OF WATER SERVICES (OFWAT)

The Office of Water Services, OFWAT, helps the Director General of Water Services protect the interests of customers of the water and sewerage industry of England and Wales.

The Director General, a post created under the 1989 Water Act, oversees the economic framework of the industry. His primary duties are to ensure that the functions of the 39 appointed companies are properly carried out and that the companies can finance their operations.

From this stem the Director General's further duties to protect customers, facilitate competition and promote economy and efficiency.

OFWAT is a central Government Department, based in Birmingham but with offices in eight other cities. Local consumer representation takes place through ten Customer Service Committees (CSCs) whose main duties are to identify the main concerns of water customers and make representations to the companies; investigate complaints and advise the Director General.

The Water Service of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is the sole water and sewerage authority for Northern Ireland. Over 96% of the 1.6 million population have a piped water supply and over 90% have piped sewerage available to them; most of the remainder making use of septic tanks. There is a continuous effort to improve the water supply system and particular emphasis is placed on:

- (a) the improvement of water quality by new methods of treatment and the provision of covered service reservoirs;
- (b) the principle of interchangeability in order that surplus water supplies may be diverted from one area to another where a shortage exists;
- (c) the ensurance of continuity of water supply by duplicating trunk mains from service reservoirs and treatment plants to networks;
- (d) greater efficiency in detection and prevention of water waste and the improvement of standards of maintenance and of repair of existing installations.

Intensive efforts are made in the field of sewage disposal to improve existing installations and to provide new works in order to reduce the level of pollution in inland and coastal waters and to cater for expanding development.

Secretary of the Policy Board: Gordon McCartney (Secretary, Association of District Councils).

Director: Paul N. Bongers. Deputy Director: Stephen J. Barber.

The Local Government International Bureau was set up with effect from 1 July 1988 by the five national Associations of local authorities in the UK as their international/European affairs arm. Building upon the achievements of the British Sections of the International Union of Local Authorities/Council of European Municipalities and Regions (IULA/CEMR), which are subsumed in its structure, the Bureau has the role of projecting British local authorities' collective interests in Europe and throughout the world.

The Bureau is established as a company limited by guarantee and is governed by a Policy Board comprising 13 leading elected members and the Secretaries of the Association of County Councils, Association of District Councils, Association of Metropolitan Authorities, Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, and Association of Local Authorities of Northern Ireland, together with a representative of the National Association of Local Councils.

The Bureau's main functions are to bring local authority influence to bear on the activities of the international institutions, particularly those of the European Community, and to play an active part in the international exchange of knowledge and experience among local government practitioners. Following a detailed external review of the organisation and activities of the British Sections IULA/CEMR, the Associations set up the Bureau to develop this role more fully in response to the ever increasing impact of European Community legislation and funding opportunities upon British local government and to the upsurge in British local authorities' broader international involvement. Under arrangements agreed between the local authority Associations and the British Council, responsibility for the secretariat of the Joint Twinning Committee was transferred to the Bureau from July 1989.

While acting primarily as a service unit for its parent Associations in the European and wider international fields, the Bureau also provides the continuing framework for the British Sections of IULA and CEMR.

Associate membership of the British Sections is open to societies and other organisations connected with local government on an annual subscription basis.

There is in addition a class of individual subscribing membership of the British Sections; this is open to serving and former elected members and officers of principal local authorities in the UK and to other persons connected with or interested in local government who support the objects of the British Sections.

The principal tasks of the Bureau include:

- Monitoring European Community policies affecting UK local authorities, formulating collective views on these and promoting them at all levels, both within the UK and directly at Community level;
- Further developing the European Information Service, including the analysis of Community policy proposals and funding opportunities and a positive approach to lobbying on behalf of UK local authorities;

- Organising UK involvement in the exchange of information, ideas and practices among local and regional authorities in Europe and worldwide;

- Organising UK participation in the Standing Conference of Local and Regional Authorities of Europe (Council of Europe);

- Participating in initiatives to promote and assist the practice of effective local self-government throughout the world, notably in the developing countries and in Eastern Europe;

- Organisation of conferences, seminars and workshops on these themes.

- Providing twinning advice and a clearing-house service for international municipal links.

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES (IULA)

IULA's main aims are:

- to promote the welfare of citizens through more effective local government;
- to raise standards of local administration and services;
- to encourage the international exchange of information and personal contacts amongst its members;
- and
- to foster citizen involvement in local government affairs.

IULA was founded in Ghent (Belgium) in 1913 following a congress on The Art of Building Towns and the Organisation of Municipal Life. The main activity of the organisation between that time and 1939 was the holding of biennial congresses. After the second world war the headquarters moved to The Hague (Netherlands), initially in the offices of the Union of Netherlands Municipalities and more recently in its own premises sharing certain facilities and common services with the International Federation for Housing and Planning which is located in adjoining premises.

IULA's membership comprises local authority Associations and individual local authorities in more than 70 countries throughout the world. In a few countries a specific national section is constituted, normally by the local authority Associations, while in others a particular Association, local authority or Institute serves as the national link with IULA. Special categories of membership are available to central and regional government ministries, educational and research institutes, and also to individuals actively involved in local government or in teaching and research aspects. Where, as in Britain, a national section of IULA exists, this handles all the membership arrangements in respect of that country. In 1990 CEMR (see opposite) became the European Regional Section of IULA. IULA has recently set up Asian, Latin-American, Eastern Mediterranean/Middle East and African Sections in order to strengthen its involvement in those areas. The associations and members in North America are also coordinating activities.

IULA promotes its aims through a varied programme of activities the scope of which is set out in a development programme. These include:

World congresses:

These congresses are held every two years, generally alternating between venues in Europe and in another continent. They bring together some 1,000-1,500 local government practitioners from most of the countries with IULA connections. Recent topics have been: traffic in city centres; the management of public utilities; local finance; local government reorganisation; leisure activities; urbanisation; North/South cooperation; the World Declaration of Local Self-Government. Recent congresses have been held in Stockholm (1983), Rio de Janeiro (1985), Rome (1987), Perth, Australia (1989) and Oslo (1991).

Regional seminars and conferences:

These smaller meetings concentrate on topics of special interest to IULA's members in a particular continent.

Specialist meetings:

Several specialist interest groups operate within the IULA framework, e.g. periodic meetings of Secretaries of National Associations of local authorities, bodies dealing with the environment, the operation of wholesale markets, with municipal insurance, and with technical developments in local government, and a committee of local authority chief executives. CEMR now handles IULA's work in relation to the European Community and the Council of Europe.

Training and technical assistance

A number of training courses are run each year to enable senior local government officials from developing countries to examine a particular subject on a comparative basis through a programme of lectures and study visits in at least three, usually European, countries. Many of the participants are sponsored by the international technical assistance programmes of the United Nations and other intergovernmental organisations, and further assistance is provided by the governments and local authorities of the host countries. IULA is also involved in the provision of on-the-spot management training in developing countries and in the channelling of practitioner experience into technical assistance projects sponsored by the international agencies.

Publications:

IULA's List of Publications (available from the British Section) includes more than 150 titles on various aspects of local government structures and services. IULA also publishes a monthly Newsletter which reports events and developments of interest to local government people throughout the world and a six-monthly journal Planning and Administration.

Management

IULA is directed by a Council representative of the active membership and an Executive Committee comprising 35 members, which meets twice yearly to oversee the implementation of policy. The UK has 10 seats on the IULA Council and one seat on the Executive Committee.

COUNCIL OF EUROPEAN MUNICIPALITIES AND REGIONS (Conseil des Communes et Régions d'Europe) (CEMR), EUROPEAN REGIONAL SECTION of IULA

Headquarters: 41 Quai d'Orsay, 75007 Paris, France. Tel: 4551 4001.

President: Josef Hofmann (Mayor of Mainz, Federal Republic of Germany).

Secretary-General: Elisabeth Gateau.

Deputy Secretary-General: —.

CEMR's aims are:

- to secure, strengthen and protect the autonomy of local authorities;
- to facilitate the operations of local authorities, safeguard their liberties and contribute to their prosperity, in particular through the development of inter-authority arrangements and undertakings;
- to develop the European spirit amongst local and regional communities and authorities with a view to promoting European unity founded upon the autonomy of these communities;
- to provide for the participation and representation of local intermediate and regional communities and authorities in the European and international institutions; and
- to achieve the establishment amongst the future European institutions of an Assembly representing local and regional communities and authorities.

The Council of European Municipalities was founded in 1951 in Geneva by a group of national and local political figures convinced that the building of a united Europe after the destruction of two world wars called for the involvement not only of governments but also of the broad mass of people in their local communities. The organisation's name was changed in 1984 to Council of European Municipalities and Regions to reflect the fact that its membership comprises all levels of local, intermediate and regional authorities.

CEMR's membership comprises national sections in 25 European countries. These national sections organise many activities on their own initiative as well as participating in the activities of the organisation at European level.

CEMR's European programme of activities includes:

Assemblies of European Municipalities and Regions:

These congresses are held every two years in different centres and bring together some 2,500–3,000 local and regional elected members and officials for a major pro-European manifestation. Recent congresses have been held in Turin (1984), Berlin (1986), Glasgow (1988) and Lisbon (1990). The next in 1992 will be in Strasbourg.

Ad hoc meetings:

CEMR promotes special conferences and meetings on relevant European themes, often in collaboration with the European Community Institutions. Such conferences have been concerned with EEC urban problems, Lausanne 1991, direct elections to the European Parliament, town twinning (Brighton 1983, Bordeaux 1987), drug problems (The Hague 1985), cities and economic development (Rotterdam 1986), women's issues (Antwerp 1988), sources of finance (annually), and East–West relations (various).

CEMR, together with the Assembly of European Regions, holds regular meetings with the European Commission on regional policy, transport policy and other matters. CEMR is also closely associated with the work of the European Parliament and runs the Permanent Representation of Local and Regional Authorities with the European Community as its Brussels liaison office.

Publications:

CEMR's national sections publish their own periodicals, and they also hold stocks of the reports submitted to CEMR congresses and other meetings.

Management

CEMR is directed by an Assembly of Delegates, which meets biennially in the years between the major congresses, and by a European Policy Committee of some 40 members and a (smaller) Committee of Presidents which between them meet about four times per year to oversee the implementation of policy. All the national sections are represented on each of these bodies.

THE SOCIETY OF CHIEF PERSONNEL OFFICERS IN LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Civic Centre, PO Box 25, West St., Oldham, OL1 1UN

The Society of Chief Personnel Officers (SOCPO) was established in 1974 at the time of the last major reorganisation of local government and when, following the reports of the Mallaby and Bains Committees, steps were being taken to improve the scope and quality of personnel management in local authorities.

Membership of the Society is open to the most senior personnel officer in each local authority in England and Wales. To qualify for membership the officer must be responsible for providing policy advice on personnel issues to the Chief Executive or Council and be accountable for the operation and performance of the central personnel management function.

The main objectives of SOCPO are to improve the effectiveness of the personnel function in local government, to promote its use and development and to provide a service of professional advice. To achieve this the Society maintains close contact with the local authority associations, the Local Government Management Board, the Institute of Personnel Management and other professional organisations.

The work of the Society is conducted through eleven regional groups and, at national level, an Executive Committee and specialist committees dealing with—

- * recruitment, training and development
- * manpower information and planning
- * performance, reward and organisation
- * equal opportunities

The Society produces reports and advice on a range of issues related to human resource management and mounts a major conference each year—usually in March.

SECTION 24—POWER

OFFICE OF ELECTRICITY REGULATION (OFFER)

Hagley House, Hagley Rd., Birmingham, B16 8QG (021-456 2100; Fax: 021-456 4664)

Director General of Electricity Supply: Prof. S. C. Littlechild

Deputy Director General: Miss Penny Boys

Deputy Director General (Scotland): Mr. Bob Irvine

The Electricity Act 1989 means that domestic consumers will now receive their electricity from public electricity suppliers instead of the old area boards. Larger commercial and industrial users, however, are now able to negotiate individually for their electricity, not only from public suppliers but also from generating companies and private suppliers.

Each public electricity supplier is obliged to meet specific requirements and conditions laid down by Parliament and the Secretary of State for Energy.

In order to monitor the electricity supply industry's activities, and to ensure that the companies comply with their statutory obligations, OFFER, the Office of Electricity Regulation—an independent regulatory body with wide ranging powers—has been set up.

The Electricity Act 1989 also established Electricity Consumers' Committees to represent the interests of all electricity consumers—domestic, commercial and industrial. Together OFFER and the Consumers' Committees have responsibilities to provide important new safeguards for all electricity consumers.
